Boat Official Hailed 'Coup' In Congress, Inquiry Hears

Submarine Firm Agent
Wrote of Success
on Appointments.

Influence in House Is Denied by Carse

Relations Claimed With High United States
Navy Officials.

By Robert C. Albright.
A role played by America's largest builders of submarines back-stage of Washington's legislative and diplomatic theater yesterday added an intriguing domestic chapter to Senate disclosures of international barter for arms.

Sterling J. Joyner, vice president and Washington representative of the Electric Boat Co., claimed he "successfully managed" appointment of two members of the powerful House Rules Committee in 1928, in a letter read into the record.

Named in the Joyner letter were Representative Joseph W. Martin, Jr., of Massachusetts, assistant Republican floor leader of the House, and former Representative Franklin Fort of New Jersey.

Made Other Claims.
Joyner, who has been absent from all hearings of the committee on account of illness, wrote another letter the following spring claiming "our legislative efforts have borne fruit" in passage of a cruiser bill, submarine appropriations, the second deficiency bill, and a private claim by the Electric Boat Co.

"Successfully managed campaign for candidate, both Committee, which is most important to us when any legislation is up," read the first letter, dated December 18, 1928, and addressed to President Henry R. Carse, of the Electric Boat Co.

"Brought in some Western States, New England States, New York, Pennsylvania and Michigan in Fort Case, and New Jersey, Michigan, New York, Illinois, South Dakota and Pennsylvania in Martin's case."

"Candidates successfully elected to Rules Committee, Mr. Martin, Mr. Hon. Joseph W. Martin, Jr., Massachusetts."

"Hon. Franklin Fort, New Jersey. The Rules Committee is the most important in Congress. It absolutely controls legislation."

"Thanking you with kind regards, S. J. JOYNER."

Carse Denies Lobbying.
Heavy-set, slow-speaking President Carse, quickly denied his company took any interest in "lobbying" activities, and said he had no personal knowledge of the matters referred to. He told the committee Joyner is paid a salary of $15,000 a year.

Mrs. Coo Given Death Penalty

Jury Returns Verdict in "Insurance" Murder
After Two Hours.

Cooperstown, N. Y., Sept. 6 (P).—Eva Coo was convicted early tonight of the "insurance" murder of Harry Wright. But was sentenced to die in the electric chair at Sing Sing the week of October 15.

A few minutes later her friend, Martha Clift, who turned State's witness against Mrs. Coo, was permitted to plead guilty to second-degree murder and was sentenced to serve 20 years to life imprisonment.

A jury of farmers gave its decision in Mrs. Coo's case after two hours' deliberation. For the first time during the sensational four-week trial, the 47-year-old roadhouse proprietress, Canadian born, lost her composure. She shuddered violently. When she was led before Justice Riley H. Heath to hear the death sentence she walked unsteadily.

There was no trace of the tears of a few hours earlier when her lawyer pictured her to the jury as a woman betrayed by her friends, lovers and the law.

Mrs. Clift, a mother, 27, wept silently when she stood before the Supreme Court justice. In her testimony she accused Mrs. Coo of hitting Wright with a mallet and throwing him under her automobile.

The State charged the murder was prompted by Mrs. Coo's desire to collect $10,000 insurance on Wright, her crippled handy man.

Mrs. Coo was ordered taken to Sing Sing tomorrow morning to await execution. Unless the Court of Appeals acts, only Gov. Herbert H. Lehman can save her by an act of executive clemency.

Teacher Draws $1,352
Back Pay; Bandits Get It

Hotchkiss, Sept. 6 (P).—Miss Edna Hitchcock, Chicago high school art teacher, was "in the money" for only a few minutes today after cashing a check for $1,352, her back salary for seven months.

Two robbers took the money from her a few blocks from the bank.

Vast Rail Revamping Mapped by President; Systems Fear Seizure

Confer on Program for Congress.

By Leon Dure, Jr.
Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 6.—President Roosevelt is quietly preparing to submit to Congress a "comprehensive" program of legislation which will involve major alterations in the Nation's system of railroad, motor, water and air transportation. This was disclosed here today by Joseph B. Eastman, self-spoken Federal coordinator of transportation, after a long automobile tour with the President, during which they sketched the rough outline of an entire new deal for the railroads. Explaining that plans are still in a formative stage, Mr. Eastman preferred not to go into detail. But he did not deny that they contemplate sweeping changes in the present set-up, including Federal regulation of the railroads' motor and water competitors.

Although nothing was forthcoming from the "summer White House" unusual importance was attached to Mr. Eastman's visit in view of the fact that only yesterday.

Kent Feigned Collapse, Say Court Doctors

Kidnap Defendant's Recovery.

Fincastle, Va., Sept. 6 (P).—After 12 hours in a coma, Maj. Robert C. Kent, Jr., on trial here on a charge of kidnapping Mrs. Mary J. Hastings, regained consciousness late tonight.

Dr. W. N. Breckenridge, Kent's physician, said, "He should be ready for trial tomorrow. He recognized me and begged me to let him sleep."

The major collapsed during his trial in Botetourt County Court this morning. Efforts to revive him failed and his trial was recessed.

Kent said he had no recollection of what happened during the last 12 hours.

Fincastle, Va., Sept. 6 (P).—Dr. J. S. DeJarnette, superintendent of Western State Hospital, and two other physicians reported to Judge A. C. Buchanan today that, in their opinion, Maj. Robert C. Kent, Jr., on trial for kidnapping here, was feigning unconsciousness when he collapsed in the courtroom today.

A dissenting report was filed by Kent's personal physician, Dr. W. N. Breckenridge, who said after an examination of the defendant, that he was positive Kent was not faking the illness.

Apparently unconscious, his body writhing with convulsions and a stick between his teeth to prevent biting of his tongue, Maj. Kent was brought into court this afternoon on a stretcher to climax a day of sensation in his trial on charges of kidnapping Mrs. Mary J. Hastings.

Kent collapsed as the sheriff called the court to order early this morning. Judge A. C. Buchanan held the court in session while physicians sought to revive the defendant. After five hours' waiting the judge ordered the man brought in so that court might adjourn in his presence and the jury be taken to dinner.

The crowded courtroom gasped at the appearance of the defendant, his right arm and feet twitching violently while the stick was firmly clamped between his teeth.

Woman Stung By Bee Dies in 65-Hour Coma

Newport, Ore., Sept. 6 (P).—After having been unconscious for 65 hours from the effects of being stung by a honeybee, Mrs. Cora Hawley Cole, 47, of Siletz, died here today.

Mrs. Cole was stung on the forehead Monday night. She was the grandniece of Willis C. Hawley, former Representative from Oregon.

Dr. Robert Mattingly, after a heated argument with Defense Attorney Charles Mullen, sentenced the dentist, Dr. H. Clay Bradley, of the 1000 block of Vermont avenue northwest, to pay a fine of $50 or serve 90 days in jail. Dr. Bradley was charged with assault.

Mrs. Maria Cady, of 1125 Potomac avenue southeast, testified that the dentist came to her home, threw her roughly into a chair and pricked the teeth from her mouth. He later sent her a letter, she said, promising return of the teeth if she agreed to pay at least $10 a month to offset a $36 dental bill.

Dr. Bradley had a different story. He said he "just happened" to drop into his patient's home to pass the time of day and investigate her complaint that the teeth were imperfect. He declared Mrs. Cady willingly surrendered the teeth for repair.

A letter was introduced in evidence to show that Mrs. Cady was notified the teeth had been fixed and to call at the dentist's office. The letter also carried payment instructions.

Attorney Mullen, representing Dr. Bradley, offered stormy protest when Judge Mattingly called for an additional witness.

"This case should be settled now," he declared.

The judge agreed and passed sentence. But Mullen noted an appeal and Dr. Bradley's bond was set at $100.

Russia's Plea For U.S. Loan Upsets Parley On Old Debts

President Spurns Bid
Advances.

Conceded Limit, Moore Reports

Soviet Proposal Made
Private Payments
Here Uncertain.

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)
A flat refusal by President Roosevelt to grant Soviet Russia a long-term loan and commercial credits for more than $200,000,000 yesterday caused the collapse of debt and trade negotiations between the two governments.

The President told the State Department that it would be undesirable to grant a long-term loan to any foreign country because of Europe's tremendous unpaid debt to the United States.

Continued Russian insistence on a loan as the "price" for their promise to pay hundreds of millions in American debts and claims made futile any immediate continuance of negotiations.

Statement by Moore.
R. Walton Moore, Acting Secretary of State, phrasing diplomatically the President's rejection of the Soviet proposal, issued a statement yesterday, asserting that another conference last night with Alexander Troyanovsky, the Soviet Ambassador, "was without any satisfactory result whatever."

He repeated that it was "not possible to be optimistic that any agreement will be reached."

"We have gone the limit in making concessions on the material questions involved," Moore declared, "and are convinced that to go further would be an unacceptable sacrifice of the public interest."

Moore declined to make public either the American or Soviet terms, however, it was learned that the stumbling block was Russia's insistence on an "open credit" or loan of $100,000,000 in addition to $100,000,000 in credit facilities through the Import-Export Bank.

President Balks at Loan.
President Roosevelt was agreeable to the providing of credit facilities for American firms wishing to do business with the Soviet Government, but balked at any loan.

As outlined authoritatively, here are the Soviet demands: "A loan or 'open credit' for $100,000,000."

Akerson Is Named To Veterans' Board

Former Hoover Secretary to Hear Appeals.

President Roosevelt yesterday appointed George Akerson, secretary to Herbert Hoover during much of his term in the White House, as a Republican member of the bipartisan board of veterans' appeals, the Associated Press said.

This was the second instance of a member of the Hoover secretariat gaining appointments in this Administration. Walter Newton, of Minnesota, served for a year as a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, but his commission was not renewed when it expired this spring.

Akerson, a former newspaperman in Minnesota, will serve under Chairman John G. Pollard on the board that reviews appeals of compensation rulings made by the Veterans' Administration.

'The Coming American Boom'

As British Author Sees It, Credit Inflation Is Just Now Becoming Effective.

By Maj. Lawrence L. B. Angus.

This is the second installment of the book by Maj. L. L. B. Angus, British economist, which recently caused a flurry in American financial circles. Although some of the economics expounded will not stand an acid test, The Post is nevertheless publishing the book because it does contain interesting material.

Installment II.
There are those who say that the President's policy of credit inflation has already failed and proved a damp squib; this is largely due to a misconception. Until early in 1934, although there was much talk of a time lag between bank credit expansion and its ultimate influence on industry and prices, it is foolish for Roosevelt's currency critics to declare that his monetary policy has already failed.

My point is, that since it takes a considerable time to get Government works under way, credit inflation is only just about to become effective as a recovery measure; while the Treasury has not used, in any way, its most powerful weapon of all, namely, pure note inflation. This is a weapon which Roosevelt will certainly keep up his sleeve, but I feel fairly sure he will not use it until the failure of all others is self-evident. The fact remains, however, that resort to pure note inflation would immediately cause

10 Slain in Textile War Zone; Labor Bars Roosevelt Peace, Threatening General Strike

Gorman Flays Attitude of Mill Management, Public Officials.

Says Every Plant Must Shut Down

Other Units in Industry
May Be Called Out,
Leader Asserts.

By Douglas Warrenfels.
Threats of sympathy strikes by other international unions were voiced yesterday by leaders of the history-making textile walkout.

Francis J. Gorman, major-domo of the United Textile Workers tie-up, warned that other large labor combines may call out their workers "if the attitude of management and of public officials continues to be that of feudal barons."

He refused to name the groups he had in mind or otherwise elaborate on the possibility of America's first general strike. At American Federation of Labor headquarters, however, the possibility of such a mass protest was dismissed as a "highly improbable."

Incensed by the slaying of ten pickets in mill skirmishes, Gorman said the union "may call upon September 10 the attitude of management and of public officials continues to be that of feudal barons."

Kilauea Spills Fire and Lava; Isle Trembles

Greatest Eruption in Years
Shakes Great Volcano;
More Awaited.

Hilo, Hawaii, Sept. 6 (P).—While the earth writhed and twisted, Kilauea Volcano staged its most spectacular eruption in years today.

A gigantic fountain of lava, boiling upward from Halemaunau, the fire pit of the volcano, broke through the ancient walls and spilled into Kilauea crater on the side of the peak.

The first earth shock occurred about 2 a. m. (7:30 a. m. Washington time), and the eruption followed 55 minutes later.

Half an hour after the eruption started the whole floor of the great fire pit was covered 50 feet deep with molten rock.

No damage was reported. Dr. T. A. Jaggar, volcanologist, said the upheaval would relieve the pressure in Mauna Loa, the mountain on which the volcano is situated.

The erupting light was described by Dr. Jaggar from a vantage point 500 feet above the floor of the crater.

A crack 600 feet long opened and a flaming Niagara spouted upward from the pit. The lava then fell back to the floor of the fire pit with a deafening hiss and roar.

Later the lava flow spread along the south side of the crater's interior and many new cracks appeared. Dr. Jaggar said this showed the earth still was in motion about the crater.

The eruption was first detected by the night clerk in a hotel. He saw a glow reflected on the walls of the building. Turning toward the volcano, several miles away, he saw the sky lighting up as the white-hot lava began to rise.

White and green sulphurous flames leaped up, sending a long plume of smoke that could be seen for many miles.

Several hours afterward the cascading of the lava ceased. This was a signal of renewed activity on the floor of the fire pit from which some 30 fountains were spurting molten rock high into the air, but not above the crater rim.

Paralysis Serum Successful, Tests on Children Indicate

Pasadena, Calif., Sept. 6 (P).—Discovery of an apparently effective infantile paralysis vaccine was announced to 3,000 delegates and lay members today at the closing session of the American Public Health Association convention.

Dr. Maurice Brodie, of the New York City Health Department, described recent experiments with the polio-vaccine vaccine, which apparently has proved successful on a group of human volunteers, including Dr. William H. Park, head of the New York City Health Department Research Laboratories, Dr. Josephine Mead, Dr. Brodie himself and a number of children.

"After experimenting with monkeys," he said, "we learned the vaccine we developed could be administered with safety to human beings."

A group of 12 children ranging from 1 to 6 years and a second group consisting of a child 3 years, two individuals in their late teens, and one young adult were vaccinated at the request of their family physicians.

"Of the first group, five received one dose, seven got two doses; the second group received one dose. Results of preliminary tests carried out on the first series indicate the production of antibodies."

"Whether the immunity developed by these individuals will be sufficient can not be determined. Yet, judging from results of vaccinations in the monkeys and other virus diseases, it is highly probable the degree of immunity in these children will prove adequate."

The monkeys were immunized, Dr. Brodie said, by a virus that had been killed by chemical agents. Of these, the germicide formalin seemed the most efficacious, he said.

It was found after experimenting he explained, that monkeys could be immunized by injecting five cubic centimeters of formalized virus suspension.

6 Strikers Shot Dead as Workers Battle 'Flying Squad.'

2 Men Wounded By Officers Die

30 Felled in Gun Fight at Gates of Mill in South Carolina.

Developments yesterday in the Nation-wide textile war were:

Death of six "flying squadron" members in a gunfight at Hones Path, S. C., brought the two-day toll in the strike war zone to ten.

A general walkout was threatened as union leaders declared the closing of all mills must precede negotiations with President's mediation board.

Labor leaders were enjoined from picketing the Acme Finishing Co. of Pawtucket, R. I. in first court action since the strike began.

Additional mills were closed throughout the strike area following demonstrations.

Troops were mobilized in North and South Carolina while officials sought to curb rioting.

State police were on duty at Virginia mills, where Gov. Peery promised protection for workers who are maintaining normal operations.

Hones Path, S. C., Sept. 6 (P).—Guns dealt death to seven and left upward of 30 wounded today on the South's bloody strike battle front.

Six died here at the gates of the Chiquola mill, another was slain in Greenville, S. C., and the death of a man wounded yesterday at Augusta, Ga., brought the toll of fatalities since the strike call to ten.

Two others were killed in Trimm, Ga., yesterday.

The six killed here were strikers who formed a "flying squadron" in an effort to stop operations at the mill. Five were from Hones Path and one from Greenwood.

Rifles, pistols and shotguns spouted death as strikers clashed with a group which preferred to work, and deputies sheriff. Who started the shooting, or who fired the fatal shots, was a moot question here.

Firing Starts Suddenly.
Witnesses said all they knew was that there was a sudden burst of firing. A few moments later the field was clear of strikers, who left the six still forms and more than 15 wounded on the battle sector.

The slayings preceded by only a few minutes the death of John Black, of Greenville, at the hands of Bub Watson, deputy sheriff on guard duty at the strike-riven Dismal mill there.

Coward Saves Book in Wreck

Playwright Salvages Copy of Biography as Yacht Sinks.

Nice, France, Sept. 6 (P).—With the water-soaked story of his life clutched to his bosom, Noel Coward came back to civilization today.

All his clothes, except the suit he wore, were in the sea-swamped cabin of the yacht Mairi, stranded on a shoal off Corsica in the Mediterranean. His money was there, too, and he was traveling on funds cabled him by his London bankers.

The only thing he had salvaged was the manuscript of the book: The shipwreck Saturday night had meant up the manuscript considerably, although it probably will provide a chapter which Coward had not anticipated including in the volume.

Coward himself was out of danger when the yacht went down, for he was ashore and the crew of the yacht, which was owned by an English friend, escaped with slight injury.

After the ship went down Coward walked along the coast 30 miles in the village of Le Rousse, where he persuaded a hotel proprietor to cable to London for money.

Work to Start On Extension Of Lee Highway

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST, CLARENDON, VA.
Construction of the Lee highway approach to the Arlington Memorial Bridge will begin soon, according to Dr. Samuel M. Johnson, director of the Lee Highway Association, who has returned from Richmond, where he conferred with H. G. Shirley, chairman of the State Highway Commission.

P. W. Ross, right-of-way engineer for the highway department, is in the county assisting Dr. Johnson, who obtained the 200-foot right-of-way for the boulevard from Falls Church to Station 107 in Lyon Park, securing the necessary land needed to carry the boulevard to the bridge. Dr. Johnson said the land owners along the rights-of-way are cooperating and he does not anticipate any difficulty or delay in getting the necessary deeds to the property required.

Lee boulevard, with its 40-foot pavement from Falls Church, where it meets the Lee highway, to the Memorial Bridge probably will be open to traffic before the end of this year, Dr. Johnson said.

Mr. Ross said the money from Federal aid is available and as soon as the required rights-of-way have been obtained the State is ready to proceed with construction.

Field Day Bids Received

Approximately 75 fire companies and rescue squads of Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania have been invited to participate in the two field days to be held by the Arlington-Fairfax Counties Firemen's Association tomorrow and next Saturday.

The Glorious Trophy contest, which is open to association departments only, will be the feature event tomorrow. It will be held at 1:30 p. m. at the intersection of Pershing drive and Glebe road. The cup to be awarded must be won three times to become the permanent property of any department. It was won by Ballston in 1931, Clarendon in 1932 and Arlington last year.

Contest Rules Announced

Rules for this contest follow: "Front hubs of pumper to be placed over a line 250 feet from fire hydrant, crew to be stationed 50 feet behind line of front hubs, ignition switch must be in off position, gear lever in neutral position and emergency brake applied."

"At starting signal, crew to man pumper and proceed to hydrant, leaving a line of hose 100 feet in length, break hose and attach line to discharge outlet of pumper, and this line must not touch pumper at any place other than where connected to discharge outlet; hook up suction sleeve from pumper to hydrant and pump water through line of hose. Suction sleeve must be attached to pumper until arrival at hydrant."

Other events are ladies' open pump contest, men's open pump contest and hose-laying contest.

Next Saturday's Events

The events to be held next Saturday on the carnival grounds at Bolivar street and Wilson boulevard, beginning at 1:30 p. m., are: First-aid contest, ladder-climbing contest, a ladies' open pump contest, a tug-of-war.

Officers in charge of each fire department are requested to report to the field day committee upon arrival at the contest field.

The committee on arrangements: Herbert F. Smith, general chairman; John R. Malloch, Elmer J. Blackner, Jr., Percy Finissey, E. B. Chapman, Joseph R. Royston and Julian L. Tapp.

The carnival, which opened on Tuesday night and continues until next Saturday night, is being attended by hundreds of citizens each night.

Civic Clubs Hear Strevey

Dr. Tracy E. Strevey, professor of history at the University of Wisconsin, was the principal speaker at the joint luncheon meeting of the Arlington County Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs held yesterday at the Washington Golf and Country Club.

Dr. Strevey, who recently returned from Europe where he studied conditions, spoke of conditions in Russia and Germany.

He said that as far as armies are concerned Europe is in a better condition for war than in 1914. Russia has a standing army of more than 1,300,000 and Germany, 1,225,000, he said.

The Boys Columbus Club Meets

William R. Hodges, 75, a retired real estate broker of Miami, Fla., died yesterday at the home of his sister, Mrs. J. H. Peters, of Old Georgetown road, Bethesda, Md. He was on a visit when he became ill.

In addition to Mrs. Peters, he is survived by another sister, Mrs. Edmund B. Coolidge, of Chevy Chase. Private funeral services will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. at his home. Burial will be in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Russia Holds Interest Before League Meets

Geneva, Sept. 6 (AP).—On the eve of the eighty-first session of the council of the League of Nations, Russia's expected entrance into the league tonight outlived all other topics of interest.

That Turkey will have to fight the semipermanent council seat requested was evident as Looi-Chi, Chinese Minister to London, announced China's candidacy for reelection to the council. Peru withdrew its application in Turkey's favor.

Post Smokes Ready for Distribution

Thousands of packages of smoking tobacco and cigarettes are shown above being checked into the warehouse of the District Emergency Relief at Indiana avenue and Third street northwest. Preston Markham, in charge of the warehouse, is shown cataloguing the hundreds of dollars worth of tobacco contributed by Washington Post readers to the Post's Capital Relief Smoke Fund. Tomorrow relief workers will begin the work of distributing the cigarettes and "makins" to men on relief rolls.

Credit Inflation Just Attaining Effectiveness, Says Maj. Angas

a sharp upswing in prices and also in industry.

Meanwhile the three phases of the new monetary attack on depression are:

1. Threats of inflation.
2. Bank credit inflation and cheap money.
3. The inflationary printing of notes.

Phase 3 will, I think, not be necessary.

Immediately after Mr. Roosevelt's inauguration speech in March, 1933, I argued that since there existed in America at the time of the March panic just as much gold and facilities for creating bank credit as in the 1929 boom, when prices and trade were nearly 100 per cent higher, Mr. Roosevelt's threat of inflation would probably, without any inflation itself, cause a revival in trade and prices, and a boomlet in the stock market. The Dow-Jones share index, in fact, rose from 58 to 110, i. e., 90 per cent, by the end of July.

From July, 1933, however, until December, there was a sharp retreat in both production and share prices; a recovery occurred until the end of March; and since then a new reaction has occurred. This has set public confidence on edge and another new slump is now widely expected. Many think that Roosevelt has failed, and the optimism of a year ago has completely evaporated.

And yet, if people only knew it, the economic forces favoring and fostering economic recovery are stronger and more powerful than ever.

"Cunning Ballyhoo" Cited

Indeed the curious thing is that, although most people think that his monetary plan has already been tried out and failed, and that he has now exhausted every monetary resource at his disposal, the fact is that until the beginning of 1934, although there was much talk about inflation, the total quantity of notes and bank deposits was not inflated at all. All the previous results of 1933 were obtained, dare we say, by cunning psychological ballyhoo.

Since January, 1934, however, the actual inflation of bank deposits has begun; and this gradual warming up of the credit machine will certainly soon bring trade, prices and shares to higher levels in America. To understand Roosevelt, however, it is necessary to know something of the theory of money and the business cycle, for it is on a theory of money that his plan is really based.

In England, trade revival was brought about by the creation of the following economic conditions:

1. Exchange devaluation (—40 percent).

2. Inflation of bank deposits (+18 per cent).
3. The creation of cheap long-term money (3½ per cent, as against 5 per cent).

All these factors re-created confidence, and trade very soon began to revive.

In America Roosevelt is producing exactly similar conditions, although his technique in producing them has been somewhat different; and if they succeed in England, where the cotton trade and shipping are dying out, and where prosperity depends at 30 per cent on foreign trade, how much more easily will they succeed in America, with her unbounded resources, her masses of gold, her lack of dependence on foreign trade (only 10 per cent), and her population of 125,000,000 which can trade with each other without the impediment of tariffs.

Well-Wishers Frightened

At the moment of writing, however, July, 1934, the American position is frightening most of her well-wishers. Some trades have reacted more than the normal seasonal amount since the spring peak; Government debt is rapidly increasing; the budget is unbalanced; the wheat crop has failed; employers complain of the confusion caused by codes and of their higher costs brought about by shorter hours.

Workers complain of rising retail prices; a recovery occurred until the end of March; and since then a new reaction has occurred. This has set public confidence on edge and another new slump is now widely expected. Many think that Roosevelt has failed, and the optimism of a year ago has completely evaporated.

And yet, if people only knew it, the economic forces favoring and fostering economic recovery are stronger and more powerful than ever.

Rail Shake-up Plans Mapped By Roosevelt

day Mr. Roosevelt conferred at length with J. J. Pelley, president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford, and A. A. Berle, Jr., a rail expert.

Mr. Eastman said he is drafting a report on legislation for the next session of Congress, which comes in January. Another report, dealing with "Government subsidies for all forms of transportation," will be ready by the end of this month.

"I think it will be a really comprehensive program," was all the coordinator would say.

He intimated, however, that they will include proposals he submitted last winter, some of which were introduced but not pressed in Congress. Hence, it was believed the President intends to unite into a general program all the legislative ends for action at this session.

Plans I. C. C. Rule for All

Among the Eastman proposals is that water and motor carriers be placed under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and thus put on a par with the railroads. The latter have been insisting that their competitors undergo the same measure of regulation with which the rails are forced.

Furthermore, the new program looks to giving the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to force consolidations of railroads in cases where they seem desirable. At present, the railroads are enabled to merge voluntarily, but Mr. Eastman favors sterner measures for consolidation.

Mr. Eastman accompanied the President and Mrs. Roosevelt to a picnic luncheon on the summit of Bear Mountain, which also was attended by Washington correspondents and the usual White House entourage. From there the party drove on an inspection trip to Bockey Swamp CCC Camp and Tera Camp for Women, which Mrs. Roosevelt organized.

During the day the President also conferred with Prof. Irving Fisher, Yale economist. A delegation headed by Raymond A. Walsh, counsel, and Col. R. B. Paddock, chairman of the Cotton Garment Code Authority, called at the President's executive office to leave briefs in support of the industry's contention it can not abide by Mr. Roosevelt's order reducing work hours.

Rail Executives Unite to Battle U.S. Ownership

Merging of Two Groups Planned in Move for Rehabilitation.

derstood among some railroad executives that he probably will do so as soon as the directors of his own railroad have had opportunity to consider the matter of a successor. The new group will be a consolidation of the Association of Railway Executives and of the American Railway Association, rejuvenated with new blood from the ranks of younger rail executives.

Conferences Significant

In the light of this impending development, the conferences which President Roosevelt had at Hyde Park yesterday with Joseph B. Eastman, Federal railroad coordinator, and on the day before with Mr. Pelley take on new significance.

Mr. Pelley is an old friend of the President, who consulted him frequently while Governor of New York. He was chairman of the group of rail executives who collaborated with the President in framing the emergency transportation act under which Mr. Eastman was set up as coordinator. He is regarded as a progressive among railroad executives, was one of the champions of air-conditioning and in general of bringing railroad operation up-to-date to meet bus and air competition. The fact that he is on good terms with the White House caused him to be regarded favorably for the new job which the railroads are undertaking.

In one sense this move marks the return of the railroads to politics as some executives view it. Once they were in politics deeply but when public reaction set in they took to themselves. Immediately after the war the present Association of Railway Executives was set up to protect the interest of the roads when they were turned back by the Government. But in recent years the organization has been less active than some of the younger and more aggressive executives desired.

Headquarters Here

Now with what some of them feel is a threat of Government ownership hanging over their heads, they have decided to organize anew. No name has been adopted. One suggested name is the "American Railroad Institute." It will have headquarters in Washington, probably taking over those now occupied by the two disbanded groups in the Transportation Building.

Vast Stakes Involved

It is difficult to exaggerate the stakes involved, for the railroads constitute the largest industrial group in the country. Agriculture alone exceeds the transportation industry in size. Rail assets constitute one-tenth of the National wealth, twice the value of all the farms in the country and equal the total investment of the entire factory system of the country, according to railroad statisticians.

Some executives say it is impossible for them to cut expenses any more without further cooperation of the Government. Their pay rolls have fallen from 1,500,000 men three years ago to about 1,000,000. They assert they are compelled to spend $250,000,000 a year on unprofitable services which the Government will not permit them to abandon, for what the railroad men say are political reasons. They say that every railroad is required to pay a charge of $2 a mile to support the organization of Coordinators Eastman, in addition to incurring other heavy costs in preparing extensive reports called for by the Government.

One of the things which accentuate the fears of some executives is the attitude of TVA toward private utilities.

Fairfax County Discards Last Of Old Schools

One-Room Sydenstricker Structure Closed; Bus Routes Revised.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST, F. O. Box 245, Fairfax, Va. Phone CLarendon 128-7.

The last one-room school in Fairfax County, Va., passed into discard yesterday when the Fairfax County School Board adopted a resolution closing the Sydenstricker School and transporting the pupils by bus to the Burke School. The same bus will take high school pupils to the Oakton School, pending the completion of the high school now under construction at Fairfax. This was the last one-room school in the county where all seven elementary grades were taught.

The board yesterday voted to sell the abandoned school properties at Franconia, Cameron, Vale, Jefferson, Red Hill, Popes Head and Elgin. Most of the buildings are old one-room schools, in which classes have not been taught for several years.

Owing to the fact that the new school at Lorton will not be completed until next month and no available classrooms could be found at Lorton, it was decided to continue the two-room school at Lebanon pending completion of the Lorton School.

In preparation for the opening of schools next week several changes were made in school bus routes. One of the buses, going from Spring Hill by the Georgetown pike to McLean, will be changed to go from Spring Hill through Lewinsville to McLean as long as the roads through this territory are passable; but route from Centerville to Clifton will go by the way of the Ivakota Farm. Chairman John T. Bell was given authority to work out a bus route from the old Rock Hill School to Centerville.

The Rev. Clarence Stuart McClellan, rector of the Falls Episcopal Church at Falls Church, Va., has submitted his resignation to the church vestry to become effective on October 7. Ill-health was the cause of his resignation.

Rev. Mr. McClellan, a native of Mount Vernon, N. Y., became rector of the Falls Church in July, 1932. Prior to that time he had traveled extensively through the Holy Land, and before coming to Falls Church was rector of the Episcopal Church at Bethesda, N. C.

In Fletcher he founded the "Westminster Abbey of the South," a large outdoor memorial to the heroes of the Southern States.

The vestry at its meeting last night accepted the resignation and passed resolutions of regret at the loss of his services.

The Young Democratic Club of Falls Church, Va., will hold a luncheon at the John Marshall Hotel in Richmond tomorrow afternoon. Gov. George C. Peery and his executive secretary, Miss Emma Hinman, will be guests of honor.

The trip will be made by automobile, the party leaving Falls Church tomorrow at 8 a. m. in addition to holding the luncheon, the party will visit the State Capitol.

day passed in tracing relations of Electric Boat Co. with high United States Navy officials and foreign diplomatic representatives, in the course of which two admirals of the American Navy were charged with assisting Ahmed Muhar Bey, Turkish Ambassador to the United States in 1928, in trying to arrange purchase in this country of submarines, aircraft and other munitions. The "admirals" named were Rear Admirals A. T. Long and Hilary Jones.

Jahneke's Name in Testimony.

Later, Ernest Lee Jahneke, former Assistant Secretary of the Navy, figured in the testimony through a letter written former Representative John C. Tilson in September, 1930. The former Assistant Secretary of the Navy gave the one-time Republican floor leader advance information that contracts for two submarines would go to the Electric Boat Co.'s New London shipyard.

A copy of the letter was taken from Joyner's files, reportedly copied by the company executive from another copy in Jahneke's possession, Chief Investigator Stephen Raushenbush said. The copy was pencilled "Very Confidential."

"As this is the only private company at present in America specializing in the design and construction of submarines, the department considers it necessary to do everything possible so far as it is permitted by the laws of Congress to give that yard its reasonable share of submarine construction," the Jahneke letter stated.

"Therefore you may be assured that I will do everything in my power to further that result."

Carse told the committee the company eventually received the contract for only one of the two craft.

"Lot of Trouble, Little Results."

The hearings suddenly swung back to the domestic armament business after a long excursion into foreign negotiations for munitions contracts, which the Electric Boat Co. vice president, L. Y. Spear, said "caused a lot of trouble and brought little in the way of results."

Hardly had hearings resumed before the company was charged with war-time "violation of the state of neutrality by delivery of four submarines to Italy in 1916 by use of what Senator Clark called a "fake" contract, and a "dummy" contract, identified as Paul Koster, Paris representative of the company.

At another point in the hearing, Vickers, Ltd., which used American patents and closely cooperated with Electric Boat Co. in foreign business, was said in a letter from President Carse to have "double-crossed us in Japan by not having the contract executed by Mitsubishi, which I sent them in 1918, which provided for a royalty."

Turning to the Washington evidence, North Dakota's Senator Nye said he "took no pleasure" in presenting evidence involving Representative Martin, of Massachusetts, and former Representatives Fort and Filson, adding that undoubtedly those named would want to be heard.

President Carse told the chairman he "took no pleasure" in claims made in the Joyner letters.

"You don't think he could have chosen a candidate and had him elected to such a committee, do you?" he shot back at Nye.

Carse Doesn't Believe It.

President Carse said the company claim referred to as having passed Congress was for $3,000,000.

The Joyner letter of March, 1929, reporting his legislative activity, expressed "pleasure and delight in the final victory," and told of "good will" toward the company in Washington departments.

"Members of the Navy Department have seen fit on several occasions lately to not only write, but to personally express their appreciation and congratulations on the success of such parts of the program as we were directly interested in and for the help we gave the Navy Department," the letter read.

Joyner, writing Sir Basil Zaharoff, Spanish agent and salesman for war wares throughout Europe, expressed himself "most in accord" with the "methods which this company adopts and sees fit to carry through in their endeavor to handle or obtain new business."

Joyner said that when he thought of forcing his own retirement, "a rather strange condition developed."

Says He Was Asked to Remain.

"The Secretary and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Admiral Jones and other admirals in the Navy; Col. Tilson, leader of the Republican party, the party in power; the White House, and other people brought me into conference, and asked me to remain in the organization in order that they might have faith in an honest construction of any program they favored with, and also that their dealings might be without conflict or confusion, enmity or doubt."

Negotiations with Turkish officials here in 1928 for munitions orders, in which Admirals Long and Jones were alleged to have participated, resulted in no new business for the Electric Boat Co., Vice President Spear told the committee.

A letter to Carse from Joyner on the negotiations said the affair was so secret that he must refer to participants by numbers. On a separate card he submitted a "key" which listed the then Turkish Ambassador as "No. 1," Ahmed Bedy Beh, counsel of the embassy, as "No. 2," Kemal Djennany Bey, second secretary, "No. 4," Admiral Long, "No. 5," himself (Joyner), as "No. 6."

A postscript to the letter stated that the understanding involving submarines, aircraft and other munitions for Kemal Pasha, dictator of Turkey, had been approved by the State Department after careful discussion with a "Mr. Shaw," and that any contract resulting would

Colby Calls Brain Trust Socialist; Loree Hits New Deal 'Communism'

Rail Leader Says U. S. Must Fight Against Freedom's Loss.

Bluff Point, N. Y., Sept. 6 (AP).—Severely condemning what he termed "radical" trends in Government, L. F. Loree, president of the Delaware and Hudson Corporation, today told a branch of his railroad's employees that "planned economy" is "simply communism," and that this country is in the "incipient" stage of industrial, economic and social revolution.

"Preliminary maneuvers are under way for a complete overturn of the theories of Government which held in this country since it became a Nation," the veteran railroad chief said.

"It is a struggle between collectivism and individualism; transforming our political system into a Federal bureaucracy is not an event about which to be academic, and no one with faith in our institutions and old-time liberties can but be deeply stirred at the prospect now confronting our people," asserted this avowed individualist, who has frequently been described as the stormy petrel of railroad presidents.

"Must Protect Ourselves."

"The highest obligation of citizenship demands that we protect ourselves from those influences which are so subtly at work undermining the Constitution and tinkering with an economic structure that has made us the most prosperous people in the world."

Advocating that the country "go back in some degree to the wise practices of our fathers," Mr. Loree said that the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution, providing for the election of United States Senators by direct popular vote, had been a "failure," and that the country should "return to the Constitution" which originally provided for their election by the Legislatures of the States.

Citing what he termed "the great triumvirate" of Webster, Clay and Calhoun, and in later days such men as Hoar, of Massachusetts; Aldrich, of Rhode Island, and others as examples of men under whom the "greatest strides in statecraft and in furthering the public weal" were made, Mr. Loree stated that "popular election" is no guarantee of "fitness," and the Senate today "stands far below the level of ability, integrity and achievement of the upper house of previous generations."

Wild Spending Flailed.

Excoriating "those who have squandered our National resources by profligate public expenditures," Mr. Loree said that one of the "greatest problems facing the country today is taxation. The pay-as-you-go policy—the revenue doctrine of the Federal Government for nearly 150 years—has been cast into the limbo of forgotten things," he said.

Trio Sentenced In Kolar Case

New Trial Denied; One Given 10 Years; Pair Get Lighter Terms.

Denying a motion for a new trial, Judge Charles W. Woodward in Montgomery County circuit court at Rockville, Md., yesterday imposed sentences on three principals in the attack on John F. Kolar, Arlington County, Va., real estate dealer, last May.

Edward Reed, of Four Corners, Md., was sentenced to serve ten years in the Maryland Penitentiary. Joseph Davis, of Washington, and Robert Copeland, of Four Corners, were sentenced to serve two years in the Maryland House of Correction.

The men were convicted last month on charges of assault with intent to kill on Kolar. The real estate man was found in his parked car on the Old Bladensburg road near Four Corners, unable to tell police what had happened to him.

Later police arrested the trio after an investigation by Sgt. Guy L. Jones and Policeman Ralph Howard revealed that Kolar had been with them the night previous to his discovery. The assault is alleged to have occurred in connection with a $207 robbery from Kolar.

be approved by the State Department.

Numbers Used.

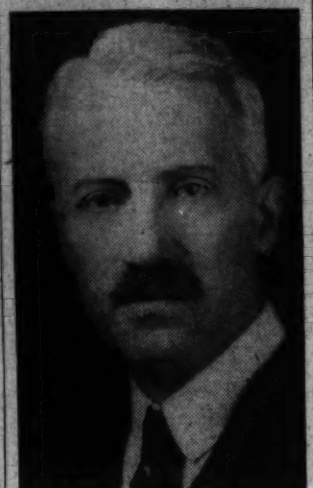

Joyner, No. 6, explained how Nos. 1 and 2 had taken up with No. 4 where they could purchase munitions they needed. Then Nos. 4 and 5 (Long and Jones), discussed the matter, and suggested No. 6 (Joyner) be communicated with, the letter stated.

"Not a thing," replied Spear.

Still another letter from Joyner, dated August 30, 1928, told of trips reportedly taken by prominent officials on a demonstration pleasure boat sent here by the Electric Boat Co.

Joyner wrote that one day Admiral Long had used the boat, the next day the Turkish Ambassador was to use it, then the acting Japanese Ambassador, the next day the then Chief of Naval Operations, the next day a party from the Shipping Board, and the following weekend, a Congressional party.

"I might say they all supplied their own provisions," President Carse injected.

Reserve Chiefs Are Consulted On Refinancing

Dr. Magill Is Given Job of Shaping Entire Treasury Program.

(Associated Press.)

Federal fiscal agents wrestled yesterday with the problem of raising billions, now and in the future, to finance the Government.

There were two things of prime financial interest:

Secretary Morgenthau turned over to Dr. Roswell Magill, a special assistant, the job of shaping the Treasury's entire tax program; at a conference, governors of Federal Reserve Banks were consulted about problems attending the $1,725,000,000 of imminent refinancing.

Reserve Bank governors who talked with Morgenthau were George L. Harrison, New York; Eugene R. Black, Atlanta, until recently head of the Reserve Board; E. R. Fancher, Cleveland; George J. Schaller, Chicago, and Roy A. Young, Boston.

Whether possible Reserve Board support of the Government bond market was discussed was not disclosed.

Decision on Program Delayed.

Morgenthau's conference with the Reserve governors followed his announcement that a decision on how to meet the situation caused by the expiration of taxes bringing in about $500,000,000 annually would not be made until Magill had an opportunity to prepare various alternative proposals for Treasury consideration.

Morgenthau said the plans finally arrived at for proposed legislation would probably not be made public until President Roosevelt's message to Congress next January.

The findings of a number of college professors and instructors—dubbed the "junior brain trust"—who have been conducting a tax survey at the Treasury during the summer, will be made available to Magill as a further base for his work.

Morgenthau told reporters at his press conference that Magill probably would issue a report shortly. Magill has directed special attention to British income taxes and the possibility of applying certain features to this country.

Refinancing Studied.

With Government expenditures for the fiscal year (since July 1) passing the billion-dollar mark, meanwhile, Morgenthau went over plans for the $1,725,000,000 of refinancing to be announced soon.

The maturity and coupon rate of the securities to be offered in exchange for $325,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness maturing September 15, and $1,200,000,000 Fourth Liberty 4½s called for October 15 has been a matter of speculation. Some bond dealers expect a five-year 2½ per cent issue to be offered for both classes.

In some quarters it was indicated the Treasury had not entirely given up the idea of a long-term issue with the coupon around 3½ per cent.

Expenditures of $1,012,982,488 for the fiscal year through September 4 were reported yesterday, exceeding receipts by $459,422,369.

Wilson Aid Decries New Trend of Democrats, 'Unkept Pledges.'

Portland, Me., Sept. 6 (AP).—Declaring that the Roosevelt Administration wince at the party name of Democrat, Bainbridge Colby tonight asserted "the overturn of our institutions, including the Constitution, is the avowed goal of the President's immediate advisors."

In a caustic criticism of the Administration, the former Democratic Secretary of State told a meeting called by the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies that "substitution, not freedom, is to be the future badge of the United States."

"Imposed regimentation," he said, "is to take the place of American ingenuity and enterprise. Bureaucratic control, even of our going out and coming in, is to weigh down the land once known as the land of the free."

Sees Soviet Ideals Followed.

"Collective farming, State operation of factories, and gradually the entire Soviet concept of a regimented life, are to be set up on our soil."

"Of course, such a program on the part of the Administration spells the end of the United States of America. The name may survive, but it will no longer describe the country of Washington and Jefferson and Madison and Franklin; the country of Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt; of Cleveland and Woodrow Wilson."

To "save our beloved country from the enemies which are within the gates," Colby said the American people must turn to the Congressional elections, and declared:

"Congress is democracy's arena, under the Constitution. The elected representatives of the people are the spokesmen of democracy in America."

"But when I say Congress, I mean a true Congress, a self-respecting Congress, not a rubber-stamp Congress, such as Congress proved itself in the last session."

"When I say representatives of the people, I do not mean the servile and herded majority, incapable of functioning as representatives, which in the last Congress allowed the Executive to originate its measures and then passed them without reading or scrutiny."

Must Rout Freedom's Foes.

Colby told the rally—called by the patriotic societies coalition in the interest of Congressional candidates—that voters in the fall elections "must rout the foes of freedom."

Colby said the Roosevelt Administration "manifests a reluctance even to call itself democratic" and added:

"Indeed, the Democratic party of today is only a so-called Democratic party. It bears but little resemblance, if any, to the party which carried the 1932 election."

The President and his Administration, Colby said, have repudiated the platform on which he was elected.

"The promised saving of 25 per cent in the cost of the Federal Government," Colby said, "has been fulfilled by so vast an enlargement of Government spending that the bankruptcy of the Federal Government is just around the corner."

"The pledge of the removal of the Government from all fields of private enterprise has been repudiated by its intrusion into every field of private enterprise. The Government has a finger in every pie and a thumb in every tart."

The former Cabinet officer in the Wilson Administration said he had a letter from an unnamed "high official" in the Democratic party saying, "I realize our course is going to take us to State socialism."

Colby assailed Rexford Tugwell,

Radcliffe Says New Deal Sound

Maryland Candidate for Senate Cites HOLC as One Benefit.

The plan and policy of the National Administration is basically sound and should be carried on to completion, George L. Radcliffe, candidate for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator from Maryland, declared at a rally in Takoma Park, Md., last night.

Mr. Radcliffe cited the Home Owners' Loan Corporation as an example of the benefits gained by the New Deal, declaring that several thousand homes had been saved from foreclosure in Baltimore by it. He said that as a result of this saving more than $1,000,000 in back taxes had been collected in that city during the past year.

Recalling his long personal acquaintance with President Roosevelt, the speaker pledged his full cooperation with the National Administration in the event of his election.

About 400 persons attended the meeting which was sponsored by the Young Men's Democratic Club of Takoma Park. J. Bond Smith, president of the club, presided.

Undersecretary of Agriculture, who he said "out-Russians Russia."

In discussing Upton Sinclair, Colby said the Californian "has thrown his saddlebag over a new mount more to his liking, the violently transformed Democratic party, which he counts upon to carry him more swiftly and surely to the attainment of his lifelong socialist dream."

High Schools Offer Graduate Courses

Attend Special Classes.

Five special courses for post graduates in the Montgomery County high schools will be given during the coming school year, according to L. Fletcher Schott, principal of the Rockville High School.

Instruction will be given in banking, typing, bookkeeping, college English and college French.

The augmented courses are made possible by the program adopted by the Federal Government whereby older students may receive instruction to offset the loss of work resulting from the recent raising of the age for child labor.

The age ruling has left students just leaving high school in a difficult position to secure employment and the new instruction courses were devised to provide a valuable use for spare time, Schott said.

10 Men Killed, 30 Shot Down In Strike Riots

Six Slain as Workers

wounded yesterday when he and fellow-strikers clashed with officers, died there. Of the two killed yesterday, one was a deputy of Trion, Ga., and the other a strike sympathizer of Rome, Ga.

Those slain here were R. T. Yarborough, 45; Lee Crawford, 26; E. M. Knight, 45; Ira Davis, 26; and Claude Cannon, 27, all of Honea Path, and Maxie Peterson, 25, of Greenwood.

Jim Cox, a Honea Path striker, was critically wounded, as was Ralph Pollard, also a striker.

Meanwhile, Governors of North Carolina and South Carolina, their States overridden by large bands of union sympathizers who sought to extend the general textile strike into every mill town, mobilized National Guardsmen at numerous points in an effort to restore order.

Every unit in South Carolina was on strike duty, and 11 companies were on duty at Marion, Spindale, Burlington, Concord, Kannapolis and Rockingham County points in North Carolina.

Gov. Blackwood ordered four of the 11 companies on duty in the Greenville area to trail a flying squad which yesterday created turmoil at the Dunsmuir and Judson mills there.

One company guarded the plant of the Monaghan Mill at Greenville, where strikers were alleged to have attempted to dynamite the power plant.

Late today Sheriff Forney Reinhardt launched a campaign against pickets in Lincoln County, N. C. He arrested 70 men in his first skirmish, charging them with trespassing, and promised to clear all pickets from mill property "before night" if he could secure enough men.

34 Remains in Jail.

Thirty-four members of a flying squad which closed several High Point mills yesterday remained in jail there today, charged with trespassing. They failed to post bond. Among them was Alton Lawrence, secretary of the Socialist party in North Carolina.

Elsewhere in the South the situation generally was quiet. Approximately 300 of the 450 cotton textile mills in the two Carolinas were closed, and 112,000 of the estimated 170,000 workers in the two States were either on strike or idle because strikers had forced their mills closed. A differentiation between these classes was impossible.

Many mills closed in Georgia during the day, while strikers were able to resist picketing efforts. More than half the State's 60,000 workers were believed idle. Unlike yesterday, disorders were only minor. Workers at Danville, Va., worked behind lines of armed guards after reports were received that the Burlington flying squad might include that city in its itinerary, along with Greensboro, 70 miles away.

All was quiet in Alabama. Some mills reopened after strenuous picketing yesterday, but the State strike list still stood near the 15,000 mark—half of the total employed. Many mills in that area have been closed by strikes for some time, only a few being added since the general strike call.

Fist Fight Starts Battle.

Heated arguments between strikers and nonsympathizers gave way to a fist fight and precipitated the bloody battle between Sheriff W. A. Clump, on duty at the mill with other officers, found himself in the center of the battle, but said he and his men were powerless to prevent it.

The Chiquola mill's night shift of approximately 350 workers came to work, complete their routine, and depart quietly. Then members of the State's flying squad gathered there to protest opening of the mill. Finally, approximately 300 persons—a few of them women—were in the crowd.

"For nearly an hour there were arguments on both sides with the mill management delaying opening pending a settlement," Sheriff Clump said.

"The arguments grew more intense and a few minutes before 8 a. m. I was standing in the middle of the crowd. We had been watching the situation and doing all we could to quiet it."

One Knocked Down.

"I was holding one of the workers to keep him from getting at some of the strikers who had come up to prevent the mill's opening. All the time a lot of words were passing back and forth."

"Suddenly, I saw two men come to blows. One of them knocked the other down. I think the man knocked down was an officer. I don't know who hit him."

"Then the firing started. I don't know who shot first and I wasn't able to find any one who did know all the men out there."

"In a fraction of a minute it

General Strike Threatened By Textile Union Leaders

Leave that to us. The strike goes on!"

The possibility of a prompt settlement was discredited by Gorman in special instructions telegraphed to "flying squadrons" in the field. "Beware of reports that the strike is to be called off," the message warned.

"Our position today is: No arbitration until every mill is closed and when that time comes we may discuss it. Hold the lines! Close all mills! Maintain discipline! Stand united!"

"Don't be fooled. We have been fooled too many times. This time we go through to victory. We'll get wages instead of relief. Don't forget the issues. We want more jobs through the 30-hour week. We want higher wages. We demand reduction of the machine load; the end of the stretch-out (operation of an unusually large number of machines by employees). We demand recognition of the union."

The new board is expected to open headquarters today in the Labor Department. Gov. John G. Winant, New Hampshire, chairman, and Marion Smith, Atlanta lawyer, have agreed to serve. There was some question, however, concerning whether the duties of the third member, Raymond V. Ingersoll, as borough president of Brooklyn, would permit him to accept his appointment.

Winant arrived in Washington by plane last night. He declined to discuss the outlook pending the board's first meeting.

Gorman termed the killing of six strikers at Honea Path, N. C., a "slaughter" and "an outrage against civilization."

He ridiculed a proposal by Gov. Blackwood of South Carolina to conduct elections among the workers of plants partially shut down seemed everybody was shooting. "Bullets kicked up dirt around my feet. They were shooting pistols, rifles and shotguns. Some were swinging clubs. Others were fighting it out with their fists."

"The firing lasted just a couple of minutes," he said. "There really wasn't time to do much of anything because it stopped as quickly as it started. I was lucky to get out of it alive. People all around me were shooting."

Woman Wounded.

"One woman got a flesh wound in the arm and several other persons were pretty badly hurt. 'To show how fast things happened, I was holding one of the workers when things started. When the shooting was over, I still was holding the man. It wasn't more than a minute or so, I guess.'"

Coroner Roy McCoy launched an investigation and ordered an inquest Monday.

L. O. Hammett, president of the mill, closed it after the disturbance and said he would not reopen it until conditions warranted. He did not indicate how long this would be.

Honea Path is a community of 2,740 population in the western part of South Carolina. It is adjacent to large mill centers. The Chiquola Mill employs normally about 700 workers.

Injunction Bars Pickets at Mill In Textile War

Rhode Island Company
First to Take Legal Action in Strike.

Boston, Sept. 6 (AP).—Mill owners fought back tonight as the general textile strike forced the closing of more factories in New England, swelling the number of idle in six States to an estimated total of 139,000.

The Acme Finishing Co., of Pawtucket, R. I., one of the largest plants of its kind in the world, obtained an injunction late today restraining labor leaders from picketing its plant or molesting any of its 2,500 employees.

It was the first resort to injunction by any plant in this area since the strike began.

At Dighton, Mass., selectmen, co-operating with the management of the Mount Hope Finishing Co., which employs 1,000 workers, threw that little community into what amounted to a state of siege.

Streets were barricaded, armed citizens patrolled them, and only those having business within the area adjacent to the plant, and could prove it, were permitted to enter.

The United Textile Workers of America for their part, were no less militant in a day replete with swift action.

State Police Intervene.

An early-morning sortie by a flying squad of Fall River strikers carried between 300 and 500 militant workers over the Rhode Island line. They quickly formed picket lines along the King Philip mill, but a few minutes later local police were embroiled with them and it took a detachment of State police to clarify the situation.

During the battle between the strikers and the local police Mariano Bishop, energetic Fall River strike leader, was first captured and then rescued by his comrades.

The result of the sortie at first was disputed. The mill management went to work, but the strikers claimed they had caused a virtual shutdown of the plant.

Eventually the plant closed.

The day, however, saw the closing of the largest textile plant in Rhode Island, the J. & P. Coats Co., with its 3,000 employees, and the Royal Weaving Co., the largest silk and weaving plant in the Pawtucket area, with another 1,100, and which was generally conceded tonight that at least half of Rhode Island's textile workers had either walked out or been forced out.

Elsewhere the situation was little changed, although in both Massachusetts and Connecticut there had been slow but steady accessions to the ranks of strikers.

Situation Unchanged.

The situation in Vermont and New Hampshire, where an overwhelming number of textile workers are out, and in Maine, where only slightly more than 3,000 were reported idle, was virtually unchanged.

The question of maintenance of law and order was considered in two State capitals. In Providence, Gov. Theodore F. Green conferred with Attorney General John P. Hartigan and Edward J. Kelly, superintendent of State police, and after the conference said he did not believe State police should enter any community unless specifically requested by local authorities.

At Boston, Gov. Joseph B. Ely, to whom a complaint of conditions in Fall River had been addressed yesterday by the secretary of the local cotton manufacturers' association, bided his time.

Ely had forwarded the Fall River complaint to Francis J. Gorman, chairman of the National strike committee, at Washington, with a reminder that Gorman had promised all Governors of strike-affected States that order would be preserved.

Today the Governor received from Gorman a telegram advising him that Abraham Binns, New Bedford labor leader, would be re-

Mill Owner to Resist
Third-Party Mediation

Boston, Sept. 6 (AP).—Manufacturers will resist any attempt on the part of a third party to impose a plan for settlement of the National textile strike, the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers indicated in a statement tonight.

Secretary Russell T. Fisher disclosed the attitude of the association, which represents 9,000,000 of the 11,000,000 spindles in New England, when he said:

"... mill executives make no attempt to conceal their feeling that any questions of wages and conditions of employment which may arise in the future are matters to be handled between employer and employee."

It was stated today that there is no organization which will authorize to act on behalf of the manufacturers on labor problems. The nearest approach to any organized body is the Cotton Textile Code Authority. But even that group must first confer with the manufacturers in the event of any proposals which call for decisive action.

Fisher announced that directors of the association will meet here tomorrow to review "the entire textile situation as it relates to the manufacturers."

000,000 at a low rate of interest and to extend for from 20 to 25 years. Long term credits, 27 to 25 years, for a similar amount through the Export-Import Bank.

Instead of paying the usual 5 or 6 per cent interest on the credits the Soviet would pay excess at 10 or 12 per cent and the fund created from the excess interest would be used to pay off all American claims.

Would Depend on Interest.

Under that arrangement American claimants would receive only partial payment of their deduced claims, the payments depending entirely on the "interest profits" accruing from Soviet business done through the bank.

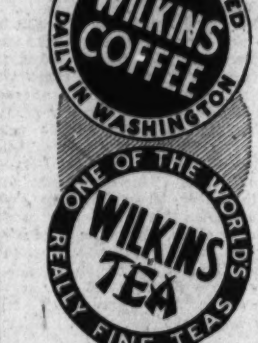

It was estimated that it would take an annual turnover of $100,000,000 in credit transactions to pay off the American claims in 18 to 20 years.

Secretary Hull, Moore and Robert F. Kelley, chief of the eastern European division, in their conference with Troyanovsky, offered 5-year credits through the bank and were agreeable to a settlement of all claims at a fraction of the total amount claimed. They flatly rejected, however, Troyanovsky's proposal for a cash loan.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas builds up your stomach. Local Fights Rouse Voters In Baltimore

Ritchie Certain to Win in City; Sixth District Contest Close.

This is the fifth of a series of articles on the Maryland political situation, preliminary to the primary election, September 12, by Mr. Waltman.

By Franklin Waltman, Jr.
Baltimore, Sept. 6.—Gov. Albert C. Ritchie is as certain of receiving this city's 42 convention votes in next week's primary as it is possible to be certain about anything in politics. His opponent, Dr. Charles H. Conley, as far as can be learned, is not making any fight to get any of the Baltimore delegation.

One of the Conley supporters, Dr. Hubert Wade, leader of the anti-Ritchie faction in Washington County, yesterday visited some of the city leaders to ascertain what, if anything, could be done for his candidate. It was understood he was told that "it was too late even to talk about it."

This does not mean that there is not some anti-Ritchie sentiment in the Democratic party here. There is, but what anti-Ritchie sentiment exists has no enthusiasm for Dr. Conley. In fact the anti-Ritchie Democrats are a discouraged group. It is apparent the anti-Ritchie forces defeated themselves by being unable to agree on an opposition candidate. The Conley supporters, into the camp of Mayor Howard W. Jackson in the expectation that he would receive the support of Senator Millard E. Tydings, Gilbert A. Dailey, the South Baltimore leader, and others.

But Senator Tydings frowned on the Jackson candidacy and brought out George L. Radcliffe as his candidate. Failing to get the support he expected, Mr. Radcliffe abandoned the race and announced for the Senatorial nomination. Meanwhile, some of the Jackson supporters deserted him for the Radcliffe candidacy, only to be left in the lurch. When Mayor Jackson withdrew from the race, the anti-Ritchie people here had no place to go, since they had never taken seriously the Conley candidacy. May one thing is certain—if Mayor Jackson believed he could have carried several of the Baltimore legislative districts he would not have retired from the race and the mayor had a better chance of doing that than Dr. Conley.

Test of Anti-Ritchie Vote.

The Ritchie-Conley balloting here, however, will be watched with deep interest by both Republicans and Democrats to see how much anti-Ritchie strength there is in Baltimore's Democracy. It is assumed that virtually every vote cast for Dr. Conley will be not a Conley vote, but an anti-Ritchie vote and will be cast in the November election for the Republican nominee.

The Democratic leaders think Gov. Ritchie will beat Dr. Conley 4 or 5 to 1 in Baltimore. Others think Dr. Conley may get 35 per cent or more of the vote. If the latter occurs, it will get trouble ahead for Gov. Ritchie in the November election—because with more than one-half of the population of the State, Baltimore always elects its Governor.

A large turnout of Democratic voters is expected as a result of the sharp local contests. The faction led by William Curran and Robert B. Ennis, numbering in the camp the leaders in the few wards, is under sharp attack from a combination made of Mr. Dailey, who is Senator Tydings' chief lieutenant in the city; William L. Norris, an old opponent of Mr. Curran in East Baltimore; Harry Wolfe, former attorney and now in the brewery business, and some Democrats of less importance. Mayor Jackson's sympathies are with this group, but he has not been active.

Seeking District Control.

Mr. Dailey has been in control of the Sixth Legislative District, formerly was a staunch Ritchie man and even now is supporting Ritchie, although he is aligned with Senator Tydings. The Curran-Ennis faction is seeking to wrestle control of that section from Mr. Dailey.

The way in which the two sides explain the fight has been how sharp the fight has been. The Curran-Ennis camp asserts that next Wednesday it will "knock back Gil Dailey's ears" and also will "knock off his high hat." The Dailey camp retorts that it will "bury William Curran so deep he will never bother any one else."

On the outcome of the fight in the Sixth depends in some measure Senator Tydings' prospects for a re-nomination in 1936. Mr. Tydings at this time appears to be the most unpopular Democrat in Maryland. By the handling of patronage he has infuriated the Old Line leaders. Mayor Jackson's friends blame him for ruining the city's chances for the gubernatorial nomination. Gov. Ritchie's friends denounce him for seeking to defeat the Governor. His only friends are the Dailey faction and those he has appointed to Federal jobs.

Results Doubtful in Sixth.

The outcome of the fight between the Curran-Ennis forces and the Dailey group in the Sixth District is doubtful. But the Curran wing of the party is expected to win "hands down," as it is put here, in the First and Fifth Districts, where the Norris-Jackson-Dailey group is challenging the existing organization.

The Curran-Ennis wing also is expected to nominate its slate for State's attorney and clerks of the various courts. In all, there are more than 500 candidates running in next week's election in Baltimore. There are 40 Democrats whose names will appear on ballots in all districts.

Of these city-wide fights, the sharpest are over the Democratic nomination for State's attorney and for three places on the Supreme bench of Baltimore. Democrats seeking the State's attorney in argument are Charles C. G. Evans, backed by the Curran faction; J. Bernard Wells, supported by the Dailey-Norris group, and Ellis

Tax Delinquency in Virginia Highest in Eastern Counties

State Average Is 15.5%, Census Bureau Finds in 1933 Survey.

(Associated Press.)

A study of tax delinquency in Virginia in 1933 showed yesterday the highest percentages of nonpayment of taxes were in several eastern counties. The study, made by the Census Bureau, showed the average delinquency for the State's 100 counties and 24 independent cities was 15.5 per cent. The county average was 16 per cent and the city 15.

The highest delinquencies were 43.5 per cent in Cumberland, 34 per cent in Accomac, 33 in Norfolk (County), 32.5 in Middlesex and Northampton, 32 in Powhatan, and 31 in Prince George.

Three cities, all in or bordering on the eastern tidewater section, topped the city list for delinquencies. They were Norfolk 26 per cent, Petersburg 25.5 per cent, and Portsmouth 25 per cent. Clifton Forge, back across the mountains, was fourth with 23.5 per cent. The lowest percentages of delinquencies were reported by the counties of Clarke and King George 1 per cent; Greene and Rockbridge 1.5; Caroline and Frederick 2; Essex 2.5; and Augusta 3.5.

Among the cities Fredericksburg and Staunton had the low rate of 3 per cent delinquency and Lynchburg was close behind at 4 per cent.

Richmond's rate was 6.5 per cent and Roanoke's 17.5. Bristol's delinquency was 20.5 per cent, Charlottesville's 10, Danville's 11, Harrisonburg's 7, South Norfolk's 17, Suffolk's 17.5 and Winchester's 19.

Assessments of counties and cities totaled $1,594,128,910, on which $33,211,926 in taxes was levied. The amount uncollected by the 124 principal political subdivisions totaled $5,121,432.

New Play Park Work Started

Montgomery County Adds Recreation Facilities to System.

The first of a series of recreation plants in the Montgomery County (Md.) park system is being started this week in the first unit of Rock Creek Parkway. The project is located between the District Line and the East-West highway near Chevy Chase.

A large field house of rustic design will be erected adjacent to playing fields and tennis courts. Facilities will be provided for all outdoor athletic contests.

Cabins of similar construction are now being built in Sligo Parkway, the Kensington playground and the new J. Edgar Blair Park in Silver Spring, which will be formally dedicated September 15.

Plans of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission also call for field houses in other sections of Rock Creek and Sligo Parkways and in Cabin John Run Parkway.

Among the facilities scheduled for the Rock Creek plant now under way are three baseball diamonds, two basketball courts, football and soccer fields, fields for croquet, horseshoe pitching, tennis and volleyball courts and a large picnic grove.

Mary J. Dorsey Sues For Absolute Divorce

Mary Jane Dorsey, of Philadelphia, yesterday filed suit for absolute divorce from Aubrey S. Dorsey, of Gaithersburg, Md., in Montgomery County Circuit Court at Rockville, Md.

Methodists of Orange County Plan Bicentennial Celebration

Orange, Va., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—J. P. Clark, of the Bethlehem Church, Unionville, Va., has announced the general plan of the Methodist participation in the Orange County bicentennial celebration to be held here September 25 to 28.

All of the religious sects in the county are joining in giving honor to those who first stood for religious freedom in this part of the country.

According to Mr. Clark, chairman of the general committee, and the Rev. H. S. Southgate, pastor of the Unionville Methodist Church, and chairman of the program committee, the Methodist celebration will be held September 28, at Palmyra, the oldest Methodist church in the county. A choir of 20 men and women in pioneer costumes will sing old-time hymns, lined out to them as it was done in the time before there were enough hymns to

Legion's Bonus Fight Put Off, Assembly Told

Defense Program Is First, Capital Man Says at Baltimore Meeting.

Baltimore, Sept. 6 (Sp.).—Because of the "present unsettled economic conditions in the life of the Nation," the American Legion will not agitate for payment of the bonus this year, delegates to the sixteenth annual convention of the Department of Maryland, in session here, were told today by John T. Taylor, of Washington, National legislative representative, of the legion.

Instead, Mr. Taylor said, the legion will fight for an adequate National defense policy that will help guard this country against war.

"We have decided that for the coming year and for the coming session of Congress to solidify our efforts on a program of militant Americanism," Mr. Taylor said. "By that I mean a strong and adequate National defense."

"All of the benefits which were taken from the legion and the veterans by the economy legislation of more than a year ago have since been restored, and we will forget that until the defense question is settled."

About 800 members of the legion and its associated organizations are attending sessions here. This afternoon the delegates attended a polo game in which National Guard players battled the Maryland Polo Club team.

Party Bolters Given Warning By Gov. Ritchie

All Who Are Fighting Him Will Be 'Out of Luck,' Statement Says.

Baltimore, Sept. 6 (Sp.).—Definite warning was sounded today by Gov. Ritchie, fifth-term candidate for Governor, that following his election he will "look out for the interests of those who looked out for my interests."

His statement was considered to mean two things: First, that he is confident of nomination and election, and second, that those Democrats who continue to oppose him after he is nominated, or who vote the Republican ticket, will be strictly "out of luck," in the event the Governor is reelected.

"Some surely will go down in the dust," the Governor said, referring to the opposition to him in the Democratic ranks.

He did not elaborate further on those to whom his warning was directed, but it is presumed he meant that it is imperative that factional disputes in the Democratic party be ironed out in the interval between the primary election and the general election in November.

The Governor spoke at two points in the Fifth District tonight. Today he attended Timonium Fair, and was accorded an ovation by some 20,000 persons.

Gov. Ritchie received a letter today from Sydney R. Traub, a candidate for the House of Representatives from the Fourth District, charging that one of his opponents, Representative Ambrose J. Kennedy, is supporting Dr. Charles H. Conley, Gov. Ritchie's rival for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Mr. Traub declared that on two occasions in the last week Mr. Kennedy addressed mass meetings in behalf of Dr. Conley's candidacy.

In the face of Mr. Kennedy's claim to be a Ritchie leader in the city, Mr. Traub wrote, "I can not understand his attendance at meetings which have for their sole purpose the political annihilation of you, Gov. Ritchie."

Politics on Bus Bill Is Charged to Walsh

Cumberland, Md., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—State Insurance Commissioner William C. Walsh, local Democratic leader, defeated the mandatory bus bill in the last Legislature to play politics, it was charged by W. Carl Richards, local attorney and anti-organization candidate for the Democratic nomination for State Comptroller, in an address here last night.

The bus bill specified that students of parochial schools should be given transportation in buses which carry public school pupils to and from school.

Mr. Richards also claimed that Edward J. Ryan, of Frostburg, "the Walsh candidate" for State Senator, has been silent on the issue and in a newspaper advertisement stated that he would do, or attempt to do, if nominated and elected.

"He has no platform simply because he does what Dictator Walsh tells him to do," said Mr. Richards.

Colonial Beach Fete to Open

The carnival will be held tomorrow, Saturday, and Sunday. Events on tomorrow's program are a 50-yard swim for boys under 16, a 50-yard swim for women, and a fancy dress contest.

A bathing beauty contest will open the program Sunday at 11 a. m. In the afternoon a 50-yard swim for men, a 100-yard swim for men, and a canoe race will take place. A horse show, sponsored by the Falmouth Riding and Hunt Club, will take place at 3 p. m.

Nice Victory In Governor Race Forecast

G. O. P. Leaders Confident Candidate Will Win in Prince Georges.

Republican leaders of Prince Georges County yesterday predicted that Harry Nice, of Baltimore, would be the party's gubernatorial choice when the county voters go to the polls next Wednesday.

It was conceded, however, that Senator Philip Lee Goldsborough would run a close second. A few even predicted that he, instead of Nice, would carry the county.

It also has been suggested by certain Republicans that H. Webster Smith will poll a surprisingly large number of second-choice votes for the party nomination for Governor of Maryland.

This will be done, it was pointed out, because the main fight will be between Nice and Goldsborough. If a voter goes to the polls to vote for Nice for first choice he will indicate Smith as second choice, rather than give Goldsborough a "show."

In like manner, if the voter expects to make Goldsborough his first choice, he will make Smith his second choice, rather than give Nice a "show."

Both men running for comptroller of the treasury, Frederick Paul Adkins and N. Newton Jackson, are from Salisbury, and are only slightly known in Prince Georges County.

Ballots for both the Republican and Democratic parties have been printed at Upper Marlboro and are being distributed among party leaders, resulting in an increase of political interest throughout the county.

Attorneys' Pay Costly to State

Virginia Court Rules on Salaries Under New System.

Richmond, Sept. 6 (Sp.).—If the salaries of Virginia Commonwealth's attorneys are placed at a figure in excess of their 1933 incomes under the fee system, the State will lose money, E. R. Combs, chairman of the State compensation board, said today.

Combs' statement was made as comment on a ruling by Judge Frederick W. Coleman, of Prince Georges Circuit Court, who held that four Commonwealth's attorneys, who laid their claims before him, were entitled to salaries approximately equal to their compensation of the past three years.

Combs said that the attorney general and several judges in the State had held that the law provides for salaries not in excess of the compensation the attorneys received in 1933, whereas Judge Coleman held that it should be the average for three years.

"There is nothing we can do about a decision of the Circuit Court," Mr. Combs said. "The law provides for no appeal from a decision of the court. If the compensation is to be fixed on a three-year average instead of on the 1933 basis, which the board used, the State in all probability will lose money. There is nothing we can do about it except hope that the next General Assembly will clarify the law."

Sewing Project Started.

Fredericksburg, Va., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—Establishment of a sewing project for women of destitute families was announced yesterday by the FERA bureau here.

Charlottesville Plans Marker

In Honor of Dr. Walter Reed

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—The University of Virginia years ago set aside for memorial purposes the rooms occupied by Edgar Allan Poe and Woodrow Wilson, while they were students there.

Another distinguished graduate was Dr. Walter Reed, whose later labors freed 23 nations from yellow fever, with an expected annual death rate equal to the losses of the American forces in the World War.

Visitors making their pilgrimages to the rooms of Poe and Wilson are now being directed to the room of Dr. Walter Reed's room? Dr. Reed was a student at the university from 1867 to 1869, when his father, the Rev. Lemuel Sutton Reed, a

Robber Accepts Invitation; Takes Cash and Goods

Welch, W. Va., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—A few days ago the proprietor of the Sugar Bowl store hung out a sign: "This is your store. You are always welcome. Come in. Help yourself."

The next morning he found his cash drawer empty and some of his goods gone, and his desk a note which read: "Thanks, old top, for the tip. Am doing just that."

Notables Watch As Naval Aces Give Air Show

Demonstration Described as Greatest Held on East Coast.

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—Ignoring cloudy skies and at times driving rain, the Navy's crack flyers today demonstrated to several hundred distinguished guests aboard the aircraft carriers Lexington and Saratoga, the effectiveness of the aerial arm of the sea service.

Aeronautical association officials, including former Senator Hiram Bingham, and representatives of various phases of the aircraft industry, as well as Navy League officers and prominent civilians, watched as planes were catapulted from the decks of fighting craft or took the air from the decks of the carriers.

The aerial show which followed included smoke screen laying, bombing attacks and defensive measures, carried out on an exact schedule despite the weather. Weather conditions lowered the ceiling and reduced visibility seriously at times.

The party of observers made an early start, being served breakfast aboard the carriers. Members of the party inspected the ships while en route to the drill grounds, 15 miles off the Virginia Capes. A luncheon was served on the Navy's River cotton mills. The employees of the mills, largest in the State, have ignored the general strike call.

At the mills in Schoolfield, just outside Danville, 100 police and armed men were on duty. They mobilized last night when the rumors that a flying column was on its way to Danville were circulated.

During the day a further conference was held by the Governor in the State House. It was attended by Delegate Matland H. Bustard, of Danville, and Adj. Gen. S. Gardner Waller. Bustard assured the Governor and Gen. Waller that a walk-out there was unlikely, and that no disorder was expected from the Danville operatives.

Danville Tension Eased.

Danville, Va., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—Growing confidence that preparedness measures already taken would head off turmoil at the Dan River Mills by raiding squadrons of the United States Navy, somewhat eased the tension here today.

Police, however, remained alert and the local authorities were in contact with Carolina police officials endeavoring to plot the movements of the motor raiding column on a seasonal "war."

Mid-forenoon brought word that 100 cars containing strike enthusiasts had visited Gibsonville and Albemarle, N. C., emptied mills there and were headed for Reidsville, N. C., where the warehouse of the Edna Mills, employing 300, closed ahead of the raiders' arrival "until trouble blows over."

John Q. Rhodes, State commissioner of motor vehicles, remained here today conferring with local authorities.

Police Reopen Probe of Richmond Death.

Richmond, Sept. 6 (Sp.).—A man whose name was found in the snow almost two years ago and who was pronounced dead from exposure by the local coroner was murdered, according to information received at police headquarters today from Lynchburg.

White there says that Claud Williams, held in Lynchburg on a minor charge, confessed to killing Buck Bassler, of Richmond, in December, 1932.

An investigation, conducted by Chief of Detectives A. S. Wright, brought to light that Bernard Alvin Bassler was found dead in a snow-covered field near his home here on December 13 of that year.

Detective Sergt. Bosquist has left for Lynchburg to question Williams and to determine the advisability of bringing him to Richmond to face murder charges.

Clinics Authorized For Spotsylvania

Spotsylvania Court House, Va., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—Toxoid clinics for the prevention and treatment of diphtheria and scarlet fever in Spotsylvania County schools by the order of L. P. Chewning, recently elected school board chairman, the board has voted.

Superintendent of Schools J. C. Chiles was instructed to enforce the attendance law, previously allowed to lapse because of the depression. Parents and guardians will be called to court if they fail to comply, the board decided.

White schools will open Tuesday and colored schools September 25. Teachers' meetings will take place on the first scheduled school day, with classes beginning Wednesday for white children and September 26 for colored.

Danville Roads Policed Against Strike Invasion

Flying Squadron Reported on Way; Peery Told Walkout Unlikely.

Richmond, Sept. 6 (Sp.).—Malcolm K. Harris, attorney for the Riverside and Dan River cotton mills at Schoolfield, near Danville, gave Gov. Peery this afternoon a personal report on the situation in that center of Virginia cotton mill activity. There was little chance, Harris said, of a strike in the Danville plant.

"We have slightly more than 7,000 persons at work today," Harris told the Governor, "and there is no strike sentiment among them."

"The union membership in our mill is not much more than ten. By that I mean actual paid-up members," Harris said. "Union officials probably would claim a higher figure, and it is perfectly true that there are a number of persons carrying union cards in Danville, but they are not active members of the labor organization."

Harris said that only 28 persons attended the last union meeting.

The attorney said conditions were normal and that State, county and special officers on duty were thought ample to handle any disorder which might arise from the arrival of a delegation of strikers from neighboring North Carolina.

It was to handle any such invasion that Gov. Peery yesterday dispatched John Q. Rhodes and 11 State motor patrolmen to Danville.

Police Guard Roads.

The Governor said the officers had been given no special orders, but that they were on duty to protect the rights of Virginia citizens.

Tonight the patrolmen were covering roads leading to Danville to force a strike in the State line, on the watch for any of the flying squadrons of striking mill workers of that State.

Throughout the day they had heard rumors that parties of strikers from the neighboring State were en route to Danville to force a strike in the Riverside and Dan River cotton mills. The employees of the mills, largest in the State, have ignored the general strike call.

At the mills in Schoolfield, just outside Danville, 100 police and armed men were on duty. They mobilized last night when the rumors that a flying column was on its way to Danville were circulated.

Nazi Workers Pass in Review Before Hitler

All Voters Eventually Must Serve in Labor Camp, Der Fuehrer Says.

Nurnberg, Germany, Sept. 6 (P).—Adolf Hitler stood bareheaded in the hot sun for two hours here today while 52,000 tanned young Nazis from the German labor camps marched past, their shiny spades at present arms.

Der Fuehrer, in full view of all the tens of thousands of invited guests, stood alone in his limousine, stretching his hand out in the Nazi salute as regiment after regiment of the "soldiers of labor" passed.

The parade, another spectacular demonstration of mass loyalty, was held in connection with the annual party congress here.

Paraders Cheered.
Government officials, Nazi leaders and spectators lined the historic market place—now "Adolf Hitler Platz"—for the review, cheering enthusiastically as the labor camps passed.

Hitler himself arrived early, heavily guarded, walked to the honor stand and shook hands with all the old Reichswehr (regular army) officers assembled there.

Although they had been marching nearly four hours in the sunshine, the youths seemed none the worse for wear. Each group, at a command, burst into song as it reached the inner precincts of the city, to lapse again into silence as it passed the review stand.

Arrive in Special Trains.

Earlier the labor camps, brought to Nurnberg in 50 special trains, assembled on Zeppelin Meadow to hear Hitler assert the time would come when no German could vote until he had served a period in a labor camp.

"We are Socialists in deed, and not only in theory," the leader declared. "A manual labor is as highly regarded as any other form of work."

During the Zeppelin Meadow exercises, which included the manual of arms performed with spades, 180,000 other young Germans at labor camps throughout the country were standing at attention listening to radio broadcasts of the Nurnberg program.

Sen. Barkley Flays Hoover Statement

Attack 'Ignorant, Fatuous,' Kentuckian Asserts.

Omaha, Sept. 6 (P).—Senator Alben W. Barkley (Democrat), Kentucky, today hurled a challenge at former President Hoover "to tell us what liberties we have lost and what property rights we have impaired" under the Roosevelt Administration.

"To say that the program of rehabilitation under President Roosevelt is an attack upon liberty or the right to own property is so ignorant and so fatuous as to be unworthy of serious consideration," he asserted in a speech prepared for delivery before the Nebraska Democratic convention.

Senator Barkley referred to Mr. Hoover's recent statement that the thesis behind the New Deal was "that man is but the pawn of the state."

2 Die as Typhoon Lashes Philippines

Homes Razed as Wind, Rain Sweep Island.

Manila, Sept. 6 (P).—A two-day typhoon, which combined with floods to take at least two lives and to destroy the bamboo homes of thousands of natives of northern Luzon Island, left scenes of havoc in that area today.

The typhoon brought torrential rain which caused mountain streams to overflow, inundating villages and tobacco lands. More than 6 inches of rain fell in 24 hours.

Land slid away at Vina in Ilocos Norte Province, burying a man. At San Fernando, La Union Province, tumbling waves drowned a fisherman in the harbor.

Rangers Press Hunt For Missing Savant

Glacier Park, Mont., Sept. 6 (P).—Still mystified as to the disappearance August 13 of Dr. F. H. Lumley, Ohio State University instructor, searchers today formed climbing parties to ascend Mount Cleveland.

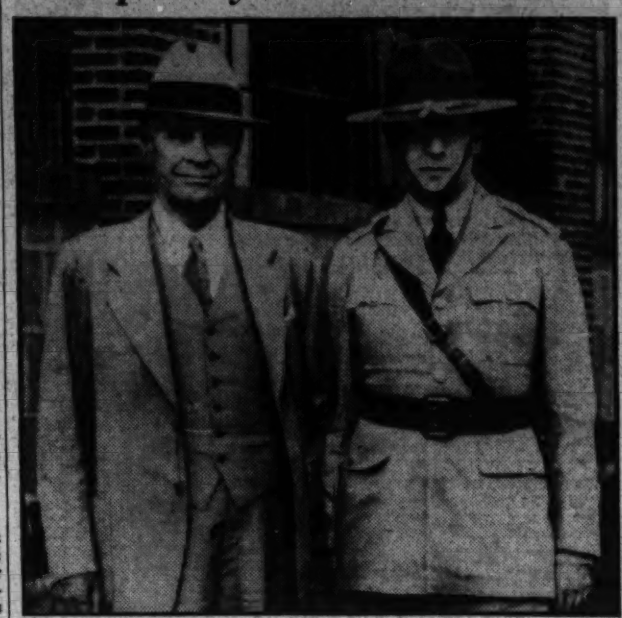

A registration book at the summit should disclose whether the man who had scaled the Alps in Bavaria, had reached that peak and failed to arrive at the base upon his return trip.

Filipino Women Lose Fight to Gain Vote

Manila, P. I., Sept. 6 (P).—Hopes of Filipino women to have the right to vote during the decade of the insular commonwealth government fell today as the constitutional convention's suffrage committee voted, 22 to 18, against the grant.

The chief argument against suffrage advanced at the hearings was the added expense that would be involved in elections.

Schedule of Soldierless War Upset by Stubborn Invaders

Secretary of War Dern and Gen. Douglas MacArthur at Raritan Arsenal, N. J., in the territory where the Army has been shadow-boxing with a mythical "enemy" for several days.

Enemy Advancing, but Army Quits Tomorrow Anyway.

By Harris B. Hull.

General Headquarters, Raritan Arsenal, N. J., Sept. 6.—Every hour it is becoming more and more apparent here at general headquarters of the American Army that the great soldierless war being waged along the Eastern frontier isn't going to end on schedule.

By that it is meant that when Saturday noon comes around and Gen. Douglas MacArthur delivers the concluding address, or "critique," to the officers of the First and Second armies and the general headquarters, the enemy will not be driven out of New Jersey.

The truth is that this black enemy has proved to be a stubborn foe. It is quite probable, the umpires say, that this force could not be repelled from New Jersey in several months.

Some of the war correspondents at G. H. Q. are of the opinion that when the American officers depart the theater of operations of the Black Infantry will be more advanced than it was a week ago when the field battle started. That is, the enemy will have registered a net gain during the duration of the war.

This is just one more unique feature of what will go down on the books of time as the gunless, troopless, planeless war of 1934. It is believed that never before in all American military history have our officers packed their bags and gone home and left the field of battle with the enemy making rapid progress. This is even more striking when it is considered that the affected area embraces the heart of American industry—the New York, Philadelphia and Wilmington region.

It is not intended that there should be any element of military disrespect toward the conduct of the battle by the Army officers. They have fought bravely and, speaking from experience, they have fought long. For the last four mornings the campaigns have been resumed at 4 o'clock.

The trouble lies probably in the fact that this invasion was expected to be completely repelled by Saturday. Two or three days ago, when we got our first inkling that the struggle wasn't going to end on time, we became genuinely frightened for the first time since we have been at the front. But it is all cleared up now. When the clock strikes 12 Saturday we pack up the pins and leave—enemy or no enemy.

The high light of today's activity surrounded the arrival of the first "prisoner" at headquarters. Behind the whisks we recognized Col. Lawrence Halstead, who was searched and grilled by the military intelligence for helpful information. The incident brought memories of the first prisoner brought into the Mussolini Scoffs at Foreign Doctrines; French-Italian Arms Deal Told.

Bari, Italy, Sept. 6 (P).—Italy can regard foreign doctrines with "supreme disparagement," Benito Mussolini told 75,000 southern Italians here today.

Many of his hearers assumed Il Duce referred to Germany and its National Socialism.

Shortly before he spoke, French delegates to the Levantine fair here asserted France and Italy had reached an accord for common action to prevent Germany's rearmament, prohibited by the Versailles Treaty.

(This the French embassy at Rome denied, while admitting that Premier Mussolini and French Ambassador De Chambrun had thoroughly discussed the entire range of Franco-Italian relations.)

"We can regard with supreme disparagement," Il Duce asserted, "those doctrines which come from elsewhere, from a people that did not even know how to write when we had Caesar, Virgil and Augustus."

His eyes flashed as he told the throng that, although the Mediterranean is a southern sea, it has created philosophy, religion and empire. This fact, Mussolini declared, "makes Italy impervious to criticism from abroad."

Not only have Italy and France agreed to work against German rearmament, members of the French delegation said, but they are also pledged mutually to preserve Austria's independence in the face of any Nazi threat.

Italy, too, will renounce her rearmament policy, they said, but will not abandon her impression that the Versailles Treaty should be revised.

The agreement, reached August 31, may result in an early visit to Rome by Louis Barthou, French Foreign Minister. It was stated, with formal announcement of the accord to come thereafter.

Heiress, 15, a Bride Twice, Plans Third Journey to Altar

San Francisco, Sept. 6 (P).—Collette Mulvihill, 15-year-old Pittsburgh heiress, said today her marriage recently to Tom Green, 20-year-old truck driver, was her second matrimonial venture.

Collette said she married a man in Shanghai some six months ago, but the marriage was annulled. She declined, however, to name her first husband.

Instead, she expressed the hope she would be married soon a third time, to her "true love," Sam Puntumun, 24, Grove City, Pa., a night club operator, although threatened annulment proceedings have not yet been started against her truck driver husband. She said she married Green to "spite Sammy."

"I want to marry Sammy," she said, "and I hope my mother will approve of him, and I hope I am worthy of his love."

She arrived in San Francisco by plane today on her way to Honolulu to meet her mother, Mrs. Thomas Mulvihill, divorced wife of a Pittsburgh oil company official.

Maloney of Connecticut Nominated for Senate

Eastern Point, Conn., Sept. 6 (P).—Francis T. Maloney, of Meriden, Representative from the Third Connecticut District, was nominated unanimously for United States Senator by the Democratic State convention here today.

He will oppose Senator Frederic C. Walcott, whose nomination by the Republican convention next week is assured.

Gov. Wilbur L. Cross was renominated for a third term.

And not only Mr. Jackson's office—but any office in New York's newest business center—the Grand Central Zone—and as for the famous Chrysler, Graybar, New York Central and Charlie Buildings—all are near door—all actually connected with the Commodore by sheltered passageways.

Wall Street, too—only 10 minutes by express subway (entrance in lower lobby)—and all other important business centers as easily accessible. Smart business men save time and money by stopping at New York's most convenient and most reasonable, fine hotel.

and brain-contents? It tempts especially the advocates of quality to unfattering deductions concerning the desirability of mere size. Such juries of the non sequitur should be rigorously guarded against, and Dr. Brown ought to come out of the West and say so. Otherwise we shall be using this dinosaur for disquieting conclusions regarding the desirability of directing from Washington the myriad complexities of our far-flung economic system.

Bloodshed.

Grim tragedy has not long delayed its unwelcome intervention in the Nation-wide textile strike. Widely scattered outbreaks of violence yesterday took a heavy toll of dead and injured. Most of the serious outbreaks, it will be noticed, come from Southern mill towns, where unionization is a new development and the labor desire to demonstrate its efficacy is therefore strongest.

Francis J. Gorman, fiery chairman of the Textile Strike Committee, asserts that the six deaths at Honea Path, S. C., were due to the deputizing of mill workers. This he calls a "scandal." But many will ask whether it is more of a scandal to give protection to those who wish to work peacefully than it is to tolerate the forcible tie-up of a plant by a minority of armed and militant picketers. It is too early to say as yet as to whose door these deaths should be charged. But the highly militant tactics of the union make it at least a party to the tragedies that have come about.

The employers have blundered in this savage controversy by refusing to exhaust all possibilities of mediation before the strike was called. The workers have blundered by failing to be content with the impressive show of solidarity they could naturally exhibit, and by resorting to militancy to close factories which otherwise would not have shut down. Public opinion is more and more tending to the belief that trade-union recognition is an essential prerequisite to orderly solution of industrial controversies. But the use of violence to prove this case can only result in a set-back for the labor cause. None can believe that a strike is really popular when flying squads of picketers are needed to close down plants.

A share of responsibility for these new victims of industrial warfare rests with those who have failed to make the facts about our National income clear. Intentionally or no, the impression is spread that the coffers of industry are as inexhaustible as those of the Federal Treasury. Unfortunately, conditions prerequisite to the more abundant life are not created by asserting that they should exist.

It is easy to close factories; it is easy to take life; it is easy to inflame ignorant and desperate men to riot. But until it is understood that increased living standards are incompatible with declining industrial income there is little prospect of any lasting solution of the labor problem. Nor, on the other hand, is solution to be looked for as long as free-born American workers are denied rights of organization which the needs of the age and the judgment of the community alike approve.

A Change For The Worse.

President Eusebio Ayala of Paraguay is reported as taking an attitude on the Chaco controversy that will not go far toward establishing permanent peace in that area. He is quoted as saying that the objectives of the Paraguayan army are to drive the Bolivians out and then permanently fortify an arbitrary frontier. Latin America should view with apprehension this move to create an Alsace-Lorraine in the heart of a once peaceful continent.

At present Paraguay appears to be winning the war. According to news dispatches its troops, after a long period of stalemate, are now driving the Bolivians back on a long front. The present plan is to build strong trenches at all strategic positions in order to hold this hard-won territory. Paraguay, of course, contends that the disputed area is hers and that she is merely winning back what rightfully belongs to her. Bolivia says the same.

But it does seem that the warlike attitude of the Paraguayan President will not aid the cause of peace at this time. Nor does it augur well for future quiet in the "Green Hell." Taking a defiant attitude now will only make it easier for trouble to start in the Chaco region at some later date. It would be better to talk less of permanent defenses and more of the possibilities for arbitration. It would be better to talk as this same President Ayala of Paraguay did in 1930, when he wrote:

Unhappily, under the mask of patriotism, there are symptoms, in a certain section of public opinion in our country, of a premature uncompromising spirit, and of theories conflicting with the desire for concord and harmony by which our international conduct should be at all times inspired. We have lately witnessed discussions in which Brazil was condemned for having ceded territory to Bolivia to our detriment. In certain political circles a theory has sprung up, the effect of which would be to implicate Bolivia in her mounting losses, allowing her no access to the river, and thereby depriving her of the status of a riparian nation of the basin of the River Plate. Such a view can be accepted only by persons who are blinded by prejudice.

Traveled Gourmets.

A New York department store, about to open a "modern kitchen congress," had the happy thought of inviting a group of explorers to describe their favorite dishes, tasted in their travels. The delicacies mentioned ranged from G. P. Putnam's Eskimo narwhal skin "hung until it is pleasantly disintegrated," to Virginia batter-bread served with broiled quail. Some of the tidbits, like Japanese raw fish served with soy sauce, sound perfectly terrible, when set down in cold print, but when set down before one often taste remarkably good.

Lowell Thomas, of course, was showing off a bit when he waxed eloquent over the gastronomic delights of Neopolitan fried octopus, which is only slightly removed from the common eel which wriggles along the sidewalk of any Little Italy of this country. But his flying fish wings in bread crumbs sound as edible, if not as satisfying, as corned hake and pork scraps, one of the heartier mid-day meals of the Maine coast.

One explorer gave the palm easily to Denmark, probably romanticizing in his memory over some delectable Danish pastry. A former Ambassador to Spain raved about French cooking, but some of the credit here must be given to the implicit contrast with what he ate in Madrid.

A man who spent many years in Shanghai still has good things to say about real Chinese cooking which "has come down in old books and by word of mouth from times so remote that even the earliest French cooks seem mere babes in arms." The trouble there is that often the eggs and the fish have a similar history. But we must admit being a bit wistful in the mouth over the possibilities inherent in bamboo partidges laced with pine needles. Most of the explorers gave themselves away when they raved as much about the settings in which they ate their delicacies as they did about the food itself.

Pancakes and maple syrup, after all, are not just the thing for the Hotel des Indes, at Batavia, nor is rijst-viel particularly appetizing before a canter of morning in the Maryland hills. Only ham and eggs are universally acceptable, whatever the country or whatever the elime.

The District Boundary.

In one respect the brief prepared by the Department of Justice, contending that the Boundary Commission established by Congress at its last session has no authority to draw a new line between the District and Virginia, comes just 88 years too late. For it this contention is upheld it will mean that the retrocession of Arlington County to Virginia in 1846 was un-Constitutional.

There is no disposition on the part of G. A. Iverson and Henry H. Glassie, the Government's attorneys handling this case, to challenge directly the Constitutionality of the retrocession act. The status quo has been accepted by both the United States and Virginia too long to warrant a legal dispute involving the entire country. But the Government's attorneys do claim that Congress has no authority to modify the boundary of the District as it was fixed in conformity with a Constitutional mandate.

The Supreme Court has never passed upon the Constitutionality of the retrocession act. It refused to take cognizance of the issue when it was raised by a taxpayer in Arlington County in 1915, on the ground that neither the United States nor Virginia was complaining over the transfer. But the court has decided that the present District line extends "at least to low-water mark on the Virginia side" of the river. In accepting the territory which now constitutes the District the Government succeeded to the original title of Maryland, which included the entire river bed. Early statutes referred to the District as "including the River Potomac in its course through the District." Consequently, the highest court decided that a piece of land artificially built up on the Virginia side of the river is a part of the District.

In view of this, and numerous other decisions touching upon the matter, the argument presented by the Government's attorneys appears to be sound. It becomes the duty of the commission "to ascertain and mark the boundary as it exists in point of fact, not as people would like to have it." Any other course would undoubtedly involve the commission's findings in a legal tangle and thus postpone a definite settlement of this important question.

Virginia is not vitally interested in the outcome of the boundary dispute. The area in question is insignificant to a Commonwealth the size of the Old Dominion. To the District, however, this territory is of vital importance. It includes that built-up area just across the river from the Capital City on part of which the Washington Airport is located. Obviously this section should be developed in harmony with the Capital. The commission might well take cognizance of this fact, as well as the cogent legal argument in favor of retracing the line of 1791.

Exit The Sound-Money Men.

If there are any sound-money advocates left in the Federal Treasury, they seem to be both inconspicuous and noncommittal. One by one the Administration is weeding out those who stand for a sound dollar and a balanced budget, regardless of their capacity to perform the technical duties assigned to them. Secretary Morgenthau is now free to go forward with his loose fiscal policies without any negative advice from the semi-tyrannized members of his staff.

The most recent Treasury resignation came from W. R. Stark, chief of the financial and economic research section. Although Mr. Stark expresses a belief that coordination of fact-finding and advisory activities within the Treasury would be improved by his withdrawal, it is well known that he was pushed from his position. No doubt the advice of sound-money advocates is objectionable to Secretary Morgenthau. "Research" henceforth is not likely to reach conclusions unfavorable to his pre-conceived ideas.

Mr. Stark joins a list of distinguished experts who have been forced out of the Treasury because of their orthodox views. It includes Dean C. Acheson, former Undersecretary; James P. Warburg, financial adviser; Dr. O. M. W. Sprague, economic adviser, in addition to Lewis W. Douglas, former Director of the Budget, and his assistant, F. W. Lowery.

If Secretary Morgenthau had deliberately set out to frustrate the Roper-Dickinson Perkins campaign to ally the apprehensions of the business community he could scarcely have done better than to choose this time to complete his ouster of Treasury advisers who are old-fashioned enough to believe in currency stability.

Letters to the Editor

Anent the New Deal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: After a survey of the Governmental activities of the past 14 months it should be plain to the most casual observer that up to this time the New Deal has been only a succession of makeshifts and experiments, which have resulted uniformly in a complete failure of accomplishment in anything calculated to promote the people's welfare.

We do not know the principles and theories of Government in the minds of the New Dealers. Maybe the failure to get results is only apparent; maybe the destruction of our system of Government is contemplated. If so, a great deal has been accomplished. People in the United States are too busy with their own affairs, and in having what they call a good time, to give much thought to what is going on around them when it does not touch them personally or they think it does not, which is the same thing.

They are in the habit of trusting their Federal Government because hitherto it has always been worthy of their confidence, or if not they could get rid of the unpopular Administration at the next election without much loss or inconvenience. Should danger of losing our American institutions really confront us most of us would not be aware of it until it was too late. The danger is this: The United States is composed of many nations bound together by the Constitution into a perpetual union of sovereign nations, the motto of the United States being E Pluribus Unum—from many one.

The Constitution is the basic law of the United States. It recognizes both the rights of the individual and also those of various sovereignties which form the Union to the fullest extent compatible with public safety, and any departure from these principles is a direct violation of the Constitution both in spirit and letter.

This is something entirely overlooked by the New Dealers, and if they have their way the United States will soon be a thing of the past, with the State governments beaten down and finally abolished, and the States reduced to mere departments of a centralized bureaucracy.

Yet they call themselves Democrats, although knowing that the Democratic party has always stood for State's rights, strict construction of the Constitution, and individual liberty, and that Thomas Jefferson, the greatest of all Democrats, said, "The Government that governs least governs best."

The Merchant Marine.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Of all the concoctions which the "brain-trusters" have prepared and spread before the American people, that of "Brain-Truster" Wallace with reference to the merchant marine is the most unsavory. Destroy the merchant marine as a "good neighbor gesture" in order that our foreign friends may have ready money in their pocket to spend with us!

This is the same old argument in a new dress which led us so far astray during the recent boom years. It was argued during those years by high-powered international bankers and their friends that it was necessary for us to pour a steady stream of loans to foreign countries, that they might have ready money in their pocket to spend with us. We did this to the tune of nearly $20,000,000,000 of public and private money, not 5 per cent of which will ever be returned.

Having destroyed the merchant marine, the "Brain-Truster" Wallace suggests, why not turn over the railroads, the forests, the mines and the factories to foreigners that they might have still more money to spend with us?

Barging Through Europe

With Carlisle Barger

The Bolsheviks' Feast.

TARKOE SELO, Russia.—Dear Aleck: I bet the czars and carinas are turning over in their graves these days. Here, where they used to hold forth in the summer, the Bolshevik guides and American and other foreign curiosity seekers are tramping all over the expensive birch floors, inside frequently with mother of pearl and shining incredulously at the grandeur which, as the Bolshevik guide says, the rulers took from the blood of the peasants. What a kick these guides get, too, as they put out their poison to hundreds of foreigners every day to say nothing of the hundreds of Russians who also visit the palace.

Our guide is a little woman of about 35 with a beret, stuck rakishly over her head, a thin blue dress that has been worn so long it has very little color left and a pair of thin, run-over shoes and cotton stockings. I have, however, come to change my standards and she now appears quite chic in my eyes. When she first came up to me at the boat, Aleck, I thought my goodness, this woman hasn't had a bath for six months. As she came to be so efficient and intelligent, so animated and with an increasing sparkle in her eyes, I decided that what appeared to be the need for a bath was the natural color of her skin and that her clothes, while plain and worn threadbare, were in quite good taste.

The visitor gets the impression, Aleck, that whereas Russia was formerly overrun with the czars' soldiers, it is now overrun with these little guides, ranging apparently from 25 years up to 35. The revolution has been a good thing for them if for no other reason.

They have them for every language, too. Foreign languages, particularly English, they get along with the propaganda, at the "universities" which they all attend.

I've already forgotten who built the castle I have in mind now. Anyway, it is about a block long and when one sees the display of wealth in jewelry, in furnishings, in portraits, he can easily understand why the Russian people finally went on the warpath.

There is a ballroom in which I am sure all of the nobility of Europe could have danced at one time and its acoustics are so arranged that the music echoed back and forth over the place. The last of the Romanoffs, Nicholas II, did not live there, but in another palace, more modern, nearby. He used it, however, for his diplomatic receptions, or so says our guide.

"There is the picture of Elizabeth," she says, with her sharp accent. "She liked to dance very much so when she died she left 15,000 gowns and 3,000 pairs of shoes, and all obtained from the blood of the workers."

Then with a shrug, she added: "And so fat, too." Further down the corridor, she continues: "In this room you will see the panels of beautiful paintings, mostly Dutch and Italian."

The walls were paneled with them, of varying sizes. "When the paintings arrived," she continued, "some of them were too large to fit the place on the wall so they were cut down—these were rich paintings just so they could say they painted their walls with these rich paintings." With that she shrugged again.

She had her real feast of poison in Nicholas' palace a few hundred yards away. "He was a very weak man," she explained, "and Alexandra controlled him."

"Here," she said at another time, "is a letter written by Rasputin. You see he could not write. He was a very ignorant man. And here is a letter written by Alexandra to Nicholas after Rasputin's death saying she had gone out and touched his grave and felt so badly over his death. Bah!"

What she seemed to take a particular delight in showing us, however, were the study or council rooms of the czar. Over each one was erected a balcony.

"Every time the czar would meet with someone and talk to him," she explained with a merry twinkle in her eyes, "Alexandra would sit up there and you see she could not be seen. So she would hear everything."

Incidentally, Aleck, the Russians have enough wealth in these places to put them on the gold standard or in the world's markets, I think.

U. S. to Spend 3 Million On Indianapolis Slums

Action will be started shortly to acquire the site for a $3,000,000 low-cost housing project in Indianapolis, the Associated Press said.

Secretary Ickes said yesterday all preliminary steps for the development had been taken by the Public Works housing division and that 90 percent of the site was covered by option. The architect's contract for the project already has been signed, the general layout of buildings determined and preliminary plans drafted. The project will be built on a site located in the slum area. It will be for colored.

Finder of Poison Should Warn the World

By Robert Quillen

The mudsill of Protestant theology is the belief that conversion waits on conviction of sin. In plainer words, you can't set a man right until he realizes that he is wrong. That is good logic. And it is a truth that must be harnessed to pull the next generation out of the mess made by this one.

The first essential is to see the truth. And the truth is that we are bankrupt—as a nation and as individuals.

Our bonded debt, National, State, county and town, is a half billion dollars. Add the private debts secured by mortgage and you have a figure greater than the property would bring if sold under the hammer.

The farms of America are mortgaged for seven and a half billion dollars, with the Government now carrying one-third of the load. The mortgaged indebtedness of town property is unknown and no estimate is dependable, but a little inquiry will show that kind of property, wholly free of debt is exceptional.

Figure it any way you will, we are insolvent, bankrupt, busted.

NRA Inaugurates National Drive to Enlist Support

St. Louis, Sept. 5 (AP)—A National campaign to stimulate interest in the National Recovery Administration was inaugurated in St. Louis today at a meeting attended by representatives of consumers, labor and code authorities.

New Blue Eagle insignia to supplement that now used and a form of consumer's emblem of cooperation will be distributed immediately.

W. B. Greenwald, special representative from Washington, explained that the new posters bearing the Blue Eagle were designed to remind the reader of the significance of the NRA. The large poster to be distributed to business concerns states:

"We cooperate under an approved code and display the Blue Eagle as an emblem of cooperation."

The consumers' sticker states: "In the National effort to bring security to all I will encourage and patronize those business establishments in which the Blue Eagle of the NRA is displayed."

Greenwald said the campaign would be started immediately in cities throughout the country, but that St. Louis was the first to organize.

Treasury Asks Bids On $75,000,000 Bills

The Treasury last night announced it was inviting bids for $75,000,000 of 182-day bills, which will be sold on a discount basis to the highest bidders, the Associated Press reported.

They will be dated September 12, and mature March 13, 1935. The proceeds of the sale will be used to retire a similar issue.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors

The Poetry of Stephen Crane.

The American writer Stephen Crane, whose early death was so severe a loss to literature, is known not only chiefly as a novelist, but chiefly as the author of one novel, "The Red Badge of Courage." That is indeed a remarkable book and has the marks of permanence; but it was not because of that one novel that the publishers a few years ago produced a beautiful edition of his complete works in many volumes, each one introduced by some well known living writer. Yet even those who are familiar with novels of Crane in addition to "The Red Badge," do not often mention his poems, and for the very simple reason that they have never heard of them. They are, however, decidedly worth reading.

Anecdotes.

Once I saw mountains angry. And ranged in battle-front. Against them stood a little man; Ay, he was no bigger than my finger.

I laughed, and spoke to one near me.

"Will he prevail?"

"Surely," replied the other; "His grandfathers beat them many times."

Then did I see much virtue in grandfathers—

At least, for the little man Who stood against the mountains.

The Wayfarer.

Perceiving the pathway to truth, Was struck with astonishment. It was thickly grown with weeds.

"Ha," he said, "none has passed here in a long time."

Later he saw that each weed Was a singular knife.

"Well," he murmured at last, "Doubtless there are other roads."

The Violets.

There was a land where lived no violets.

A traveler at once demanded: "Why?"

The people told him: "Once the violets of this place spoke thus:

"Until some woman freely gives her lover

To another woman

We will fight in bloody scuffle!"

Sadly the people added: "There are no violets here."

Without Mr. Lewis.

BARNARD, Vt.—The only flaw in Sinclair Lewis' summer place here is the fact that he isn't in it. I've been staying over in New Hampshire, at Anthon Farm on Squam Lake, as nice an inn run by as kindly people as one could hope to find in three days' drive. When John Page, an old friend and former daily columnist on the New York American, turned up in the vicinity, nothing would do but we must add a touch of the literary to summertime life. We would visit the Bread Loaf Writers Conference over in the Green Mountains on the way lay a town called Barnard.

"Let's call on Sinclair Lewis," said the resourceful Mr. Page.

The car pushed on and on up a little valley. At Barnard Corner a peculiarly incoherent gas station man left us none the wiser as to the road Lewis-ward, and we simply followed our noses until we came to a mailbox, unlabeled.

It was a huge box, far larger than a Vermont farmer could reasonably need. Blight blew as it seemed, we turned there and swung up a winding road. Then there was a double garage on the left, and on the right a standard New England farmhouse, startlingly white and neat.

"Mr. Lewis not in. He is in New York," said the maid. "But Mr. Freeman Lewis, his nephew, he here."

Which was bad luck, and good luck, too. For Freeman and his wife were old friends of both of us, and they came out surprised and shouting, and it was all very nice.

You won't find at Twin Farms a single trace of the Sinclair Lewis who knew Gopher Prairie by heart, and George Babbitt well enough to say what he was like before breakfast.

And you have to look sharp even to discover who lives in the house—only a portrait in the living room, blue-shirted and quizzical, and the inscriptions in the books and a typewriter in his bedroom will tell you.

It is all handsome, comfortable, expensive, and conventionally so. The rambling main house, the guest house 300 yards off (both Mr. Lewis and his wife, Dorothy Thompson, are thoroughly fond of guests), the white-painted iron garden furniture, the white Persian cat up the apple tree—you would think it almost any estate from the advertising pages of Town and Country. Dorothy Thompson did the decorating without professional aid, and beautifully. But the protest against Main Street is complete.

This is the country house of a Nobel Prize winner, or a bank president.

sands of them, everywhere. The large living room, made out of the old carriage house, with a wide window looking south down a perfect valley to Mount Ascutney, is lined with crowded bookcases. In a little balcony overhead, behind green glass demijohns and a spinning wheel, are more shelves. The bedroom halls are full of books, with Robert Cantwell's "The Land of Plenty," say, on one shelf, and Jefferson Davis' two volumes on the Confederacy on the next.

A fine, informal arrangement—and the jackets, which Mr. Lewis likes to leave on—keep it all pretty colorful and interesting. Even over the stairs there's a nook, with easy chairs and lamp and hundreds of detective stories (including all of J. S. Fletcher) roundabout. On tables lie new, paper-bound novels from the publishers, arriving in the hope of a word from Mr. Lewis. He seldom gives it. Yet he reads all these books, constantly, swiftly, voraciously—three or four books a day, always including one detective tale.

Most interesting is the case of honor, seven 3-foot shelves just to the left of the living room fireplace. Here stand all the editions of the Lewis works—Harcourt, Doubleday, Modern Library, Jonathan Cape, Tauchnitz, French, German, Polish, Swedish and I don't know what all. "Free Air," by the way, his early novel on the motor, found the French title of "Un Coup de Pompe Grille"—a stroke of the pump free.

Your eye will stop on an odd volume, "Hike and His Aeroplane" by Tom Graham. But that is like-wise a Lewis item—a boy's book, Stokes, 1919, and one of 500 copies. Inside the fly Mr. Lewis penciled "1920-1921."

The only alien elements on these particular shelves are a study of the modern American novel by Regis Michaud, Lewis' French translator, an American history (which I'm sure was misplaced), and three other volumes (which I'm sure weren't).

Do you remember an anecdote about Mr. Lewis, some time back, going to a class reunion dinner at Yale? He had expected no particular attention, but he found himself seated as guest of honor at the right of the toastmaster, and he was called upon for the speech of the evening. He got up and said:

"When I was in college you fellows didn't give a damn about me, and now I don't give a damn about you," and he sat down. Well, those three last alien volumes among the high shelves are class histories of Yale '07.

Ickes Rescinds Postal Factory $525,000 Grant

Congressional Opposition to Reedsville Project Ends First Lady's Plan.

Public Works Administrator Harold L. Ickes yesterday reluctantly bowed to the will of Congress and rescinded a PWA grant of $525,000 for the construction of a postal furniture factory in connection with the Reedsville (W. Va.) subsistence homestead project.

"Congress opposed it and refused to appropriate funds for equipping it, so we had to rescind it," he said yesterday.

The factory was sponsored by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt as a means of providing employment for 127 idle miners, and it was heartily backed by Secretary Ickes, who foresaw "a yardstick" to determine whether the Postoffice Department was paying too much for postal equipment.

The allotment was made to the Postoffice Department early in the year, and then the department put in its appropriation bill an estimate for equipping and operating the factory.

When the bill reached the House floor an uproar was raised by both Democrats and Republicans and the item was deleted by a vote of 275 to 116. The Senate reinstated the appropriation, but it was lost in conference.

Representative Louis Ludlow (Democrat), Indiana, led the fight against the project in the House and sent a personal appeal to the President to abandon the scheme.

The project, he said, would force the Keyless Lock Co. of Indianapolis, out of business and throw 250 persons out of employment.

During the debate on the House floor Representative Isabella Greenway (Democrat), Arizona, a personal friend of Mrs. Roosevelt, made a vain appeal to the members to back the factory. She said the project should be supported if for no other reason than "to extend a courtesy to the First Lady."

Rescission of the grant is understood to have been held up for a time so that another appeal could be made to Congress for support.

"Jayhawker," the play which he and Lloyd Lewis (no relation) wrote last winter about Kansas in the early part of the Civil War. That is the true Lewis, genius American.

But at Twin Farms an English medieval bed, carved oak, four-postered, canopied, inscribed "Bless the Bald I Lay On," waits for "Red" Lewis of Sauk Center, Minn.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Flagpole Sitter's Trial. ("Flagpole Sitter's Wife Charges Desertion"—Headline.)

Judge—What is this woman's complaint? Prosecutor—Her husband is a flagpole sitter.

Judge—is that a matter for complaint? Prosecutor—Well, it's hardly a matter for congratulations.

Judge (to the accused)—Why do you sit on flagpoles, anyhow? Accused—It runs in the family. My father was a flagpole sitter, and his father before him.

Judge—Have you ever tried to give it up? Accused—Yes, but it's no use; the minute I see a flagpole I want to climb it.

Judge (to the wife)—My good woman, you contend that flagpole sitting is the equivalent of desertion? Wife—I never see him except through a telescope, your honor.

Judge—After all, there is nothing wrong with flagpole sitting. Wife—And there's nothing right about it, either!

Judge—Have you ever thought that perhaps your husband and you would be more congenial if you took up flagpole sitting too? Wife—I deny flagpole sitting is a job and insist it is glorified loafing. How would you like a flagpole sitter in the family?

Judge—I never thought about it, but I suppose it would be embarrassing. Wife—You have no ideal. Why, whenever I go shopping with friends, I'm always afraid one of them will look up in the air and say, "Why look! There's your husband waving in the breeze again."

Judge—But you knew your husband was a flagpole sitter when you married him, didn't you? Wife—Yes, but I thought he would get over it.

The accused (with sudden indignation)—Say, she didn't get any worse break than I did. Why, when I married her she was a channel swimmer.

Wife—But I reformed. Judge—Silence! This changes the complexion of this case. Once a channel swimmer always a channel swimmer. I dismiss this case.

Accused—Does this mean I can go back on my flagpole? Judge—Yes, and the higher the better.

Accused (with a victorious glance at the complainant)—Thanks. Come up and see me some time! (Copyright, 1934. Associated Newspapers.)

The "Gin Old Fashioned"—as Harry of the famous New Yorker Hotel makes it

"First I put 1/2 lump of sugar in an 'old-fashioned' glass. Then a dash of Angostura Bitters. I grind up the sugar with the Bitters until it forms a syrup."

Next I put in a lump of ice. Then a slice of unpeeled orange and a small strip of pineapple. Then I fill up the glass with a good American gin—preferably Fleischmann's.

The important thing is to use a gin that blends properly in fruit juices—a mild, smooth gin distilled to the American taste. I have tried many types of gins in my 25 years' experience at mixing drinks—but I have never found a gin that makes as smooth a cocktail as Fleischmann's.

Gin makes a drink—smooth or raw

Fleischmann's Dry Gin is milder, smoother... distilled to the American taste. It blends perfectly in mixed drinks.

AN "Old Fashioned" gin cocktail can be smooth as velvet... or bitter as gall. It depends entirely upon the kind of gin you use.

For instance, if you mix an "Old Fashioned" with a London or Holland gin—you can expect a "strong-flavored" drink.

For these foreign types of gin were not originally intended for mixing.

The "Gin Old Fashioned," like all cocktails, is a decidedly American idea. And to make it properly, smoothly—without any trace of bite or sting—requires a mild, smooth American gin, like Fleischmann's. A gin specially distilled to blend with other liquors and fruit juices.

Fleischmann's is an American gin—distilled from American grains—by an American company that makes gin—and nothing else.

Buy a bottle. Mix an "Old Fashioned"... a Martini... or a Tom Collins. Notice its soft, pleasant bouquet—its delightfully smooth flavor.

CONTROLLED FROM GRAIN TO BOTTLE—

THE "PERFECTLY MARRIED" WHISKEY

THE YOUNGEST WHISKEY IN CALVERT IS GUARANTEED OVER 5 YEARS OLD
—YET CALVERT IS REASONABLY PRICED

Back in 1929 whiskies made from the choicest grain were stored away in charred oak casks. They were left there to age and mellow into unhurried maturity. In 1934, this whiskey was taken from its bonded warehouses for blending into CALVERT.

After blending, however, CALVERT wasn't rushed into bottles. Instead it was put right back into the same charred oak casks so that the blend could "marry", as old time whiskey men say. It is this "Perfect Marriage" that gives CALVERT a bouquet and body and flavor that will make you smack your lips and say...

"At last, the real thing". And, believe us, it is!

Only when CALVERT has become "Perfectly Married" is it bottled in its unique decanter. You can tell that its makers are proud of it. The name CALVERT has, for generations stood for the finest whiskey produced in the State of Maryland.

Try CALVERT—you'll find it rich, smooth, mellow—a whiskey that is right in taste, and right in price.

Rudy Vallee Scoffs At Suit for Balm

Files Love Letter in Court Answer.

New York, Sept. 6 (P.)—Rudy Vallee filed in court today a love letter written him by Frances Singer, of Denver, Colo., who is suing him for $250,000 breach of promise damages, to support his contention that she "needs a physician rather than a lawyer." The letter, which said "I love you" and "I belong to you," was attached to an affidavit filed in supreme court, in which he declared that "professional artists such as myself are constantly subjected to annoyance on the part of cranks."

"I do not know this plaintiff," he said, "had nothing to do with her and I never met her. She has gone to the absurd extremity, I have been informed, of attempting to obtain in Denver, a license to marry me."

Wanderbirds Plan Canoe Trip Up Chesapeake & Ohio Canal

Wild Pawpaws Ripening in Woods Promise Treat Sunday.

By Robert Shostek.

Sunday the Wanderbirds go by canoe up the historic and picturesque Chesapeake and Ohio Canal from Georgetown to the Potomac River opposite Sycamore Island. This trip will include fine swimming near the Virginia shore and an opportunity to make the acquaintance of one of our best and most edible native fruits, the pawpaw, now nearly ripe.

Club members and readers of The Washington Post planning to go on this trip will meet at Thirty-fourth and M streets, the last D. C. stop on the Rosslyn car line, at 10 a. m. The group will walk to Thirty-sixth street across the footbridge over the canal, and along the towpath to the stairway leading down to the boat-house. Those coming by automobile will park at the end of K street, walking west along the tracks to the boat-house. Canoes may be hired at 75 cents for a 4-passenger craft.

This five-mile canoe trip offers one an opportunity to see first-hand many interesting types of aquatic life, and to visit islands inaccessible by foot. The rank growth of vegetation in the canal is the natural habitat of many kinds of reptiles, amphibians and insects.

Pearl-Bearing Shellfish.

A greenish-yellow shellfish, the anodonta, is known to produce pearls occasionally. And is often examined by rivermen seeking this precious product. The painted turtle, the most gaudily colored of our terrapins, is very common, particularly in the canal locks.

The somber spires of Georgetown University are seen far above the canal, while below, in the Potomac, the Three Sisters Islands glow with the green-yellow cloak of wild rice, the food and haven of multitudes of birds. Approaching Chain Bridge, the canoeists will pass the rotting hulks of man barges, which, in the early part of the nineteenth century, were the strong rivals of the railroads in carrying coal from the western Maryland mines to Washington. Since the closing of the canal in 1924, these huge scows have fallen into disuse. Some of these barges have been repaired and are now the homes of squatter families.

About a mile beyond Chain Bridge the group will reach Lock 5, about which the canoes are portaged into the feeder canal which leads into the Potomac above the dam. This canal is a very picturesque waterway, reminding one of Louisiana bayous with the giant sycamores leaning precariously into the water and the delicate swaying willows lining the banks. On the left, High Island rises abruptly to a height of over 125 feet, the gray walls of igneous rocks partly hidden by rock ferns and lichens. The club has permission to use a

BLACKIE BEAR

Bettie's Wish Comes True.

Last night when Grandpa told them to hush and listen, he got up and opened the door so they could hear better, and heard pretty dimly, "How-ooh, how-ooh," and it was coming nearer.

"I didn't think your wish would get here till about breakfast time, Bettie," said Grandpa, "but it's most to the top of the mountain right now. Just as well fix him some supper, for Howler will be here pretty soon, and I know just about how hungry he will be." And once more Bettie's wish came true, for by the time she had the water hot for his coffee, Howler came galloping up to the door, and he had in his mouth a mighty big fat rabbit. "Just a little present for you, Mrs. Blackie," said Howler. "I didn't think Grandpa would do much hunting and so I thought maybe you would not be as tired of rabbits as you once were." Bettie told him that she had just been wishing for a rabbit, and she told him all about what had happened while Grandpa was getting the gun ready to kill some rabbits. And Howler was mighty pleased for he had brought her just what she wanted. "Sit here and talk to Grandpa a little while, and I will fix you some supper," said Bettie. "For I know you are mighty hungry after your long trip."

Grandpa got out a fresh sack of tobacco and a new pipe for Howler, and then he began asking questions faster than Howler could answer them. While he had tried to be satisfied to stay up there with the women folks and children and take care of them, he had thought a lot about what the boys down on the creek must be doing, and many a time he had wished he were down there with them. But now that Howler had just come from Blackie and could give him right fresh cottage and beach on the Virginia shore about one mile above High Island. A fine spring is located a short distance from this cottage. The slender pawpaw trees, with their large tropical-looking leaves and sweet banana-like fruits, are very plentiful in these woods. On the return trip, the canoeists will follow the canal to Fletcher's Boat-house, here portaging over to the Potomac River, which will be followed two miles to the boat-house, reaching the float at Thirty-eighth street at 6:30.

news, it seemed mighty good, and he intended asking a hundred questions before he was through.

Howler told him all about the bear hunts that Mr. Man and Uncle Joe had had; the corn-shucking and the cutting of the bee tree at Uncle Joe's house, and lots of other things that they had been doing. "And there is Hound Dog, and what is he doing?" asked Grandpa. And when Howler told him the Hound Dog was staying over at Aunt Lindy's and how they had put him to bed while they got that old ham for their Sunday dinner, Grandpa laughed worse than Billie Possum. "It's a little hard for me down there," said Howler, "for I have to keep out of sight of everybody. When I lived with Uncle Joe every-bow in the neighborhood knew me, and if they were to see me now they would want to know where I am living. If Uncle Joe should ever hear about me he would hark for me harder than he has hunted for Blackie."

And now Bettie had his supper ready, but it took him till nearly midnight to get through eating it, for they kept him so busy telling them things that he just couldn't half eat his supper. But they certainly did enjoy it, and Bettie was happy to hear about Blackie and that he was getting along so well. She used to think that he was a pretty lazy sort of fellow, and, as you will remember, she would make him wash dishes and do other things around the house that he didn't like to do. But it was all different now, for Blackie was the king of the creek, and every animal that knew him thought he was the greatest fellow in the world. And Bettie thought the same thing. And when she was fixing Howler's bed she gave an extra pat to his pillow because he had brought her such good news from Blackie.

Clubwomen Enthusiastic Over 'World Moves On,' 'Fountain' and 'Belle of Nineties'

East and West Represented in Their Summary

More About Fannie Brice; Those Exclusive Football Films Go on View.

By Gerald G. Gross

(Batting for Nelson B. Bell.)

Through the benevolence of Will Hays, fellow Hoosier, former Postmaster General and for these past several years czar of the motion picture industry, there comes to this desk an interesting pamphlet purporting to reveal what six large women's organizations think of the latest films.

Of the eight features selected as the best of the month (August) three, namely, "The Fountain," "The World Moves On," and "Treasure Island," are now playing at downtown houses in Washington. One was on exhibition a few weeks ago and the other four are still on the way.

The joint estimates, representing both the East and West Coasts, were prepared by preview groups appointed by the D. A. R., National Society of New England Women, General Federation of Women's Clubs, California Congress of Parents and Teachers, National Council of Jewish Women and the Women's University Club.

Fox films dominate the "eight best" list, exactly four of the honored releases having been turned out by that studio. One is "The World Moves On," featuring Madeleine Carroll and Franchot Tone, which opens today at Loew's Fox. The Capital has not yet had the opportunity to pass judgment on the remaining three, "Caravan," with Charles Boyer, Loretta Young, Jean Parker and Phillips Holmes; "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," with Lloyd's "The Cat's Paw," which is especially late, and "Judge Priest," the newest Will Rogers film.

A Ploy for Mae West. Columbia is responsible for "One Night of Love," which boasts "the bewitching voice of Grace Moore," to quote from the pamphlet. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer gets in with "Treasure Island," which today opens a return engagement at the Columbia, and Warner Bros. makes the grade with "Here Comes the Navy," recently on view at the Earle. "The Fountain," Ann Harding vehicle, that seems destined for at least two weeks across street from the Treasury, is an RKO-Radio picture.

But here's where we got our big surprise. The East Coast ladies, in whose ranks are many prim school teachers, anxious mothers and stern dowagers, actually went on record in enthusiastic support of a Mae West picture. "Yes," indeed, they said not only that "Belle of the Nineties," whose curvaceous star has had the amusement world topsy-turvy for years with her naughty plays and movies, has a Mae West whose "singing and comedy are enjoyable," but that "it is unobjectionable and carries a type of melodramatic entertainment that will amuse."

"Her costumes are gorgeous and her performance is the best thing that she has done to date."

And that's what the East Coast clubwomen think of "Belle of the Nineties," which the local Warner offices are going to install soon.

Rialto's Opening Feature. The East Coast preview committee thought "Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back" was "unusually entertaining" (check); recommended "Crime Without Passion," opening today at the Metropolitan, as first-rate adult entertainment with an appeal limited to those who enjoy subtle psychological drama (double check) and reported that "There's Always Tomorrow" has clever treatment and excellent acting by a superb cast. The latter is the Universal feature that comes into the still dark Rialto next Thursday.

"A great production, worthy of the engrossing story on which it is based," is the way "The Count of Monte Cristo" was described by the clubwomen on this side of the continent. Their opinion will not be resented by Haride Meakin, who is ready to make plans to receive the "Count" at Keith's as soon as Miss Harding steps out.

The Western report said David Holt steals "You Belong to Me," which seems to be not quite so, although we couldn't get excited about Lee Tracy, Helen Mack or Helen Morgan; recommended "She Loves Me Not" while condemning it for a complicated, ridiculous plot and unnecessary drinking, and tagged "Down to Their Last Yacht" as follows: "A cheap, vulgar picture which will offend the intelligence of most audiences."

You said it, ladies.

Another Week on F Street

The popularity of "Chained" and "Treasure Island" keeps the former at the Palace and returns the latter to the Columbia after a two-week run at Thirteenth and F. Here are Joan Crawford and Clark Gable, stars in "Chained," and Lionel Barrymore, the Billy Bones in the film version of Stevenson's famous book.

fair city this week. She is singing "Soul Saving Sadie," which is about a Yiddish Aimee Semple McPherson, and "Sarah, the Sunshine Girl," and also commencing what is said to be a fan dance to end fan dances. Willie and Eugene Howard handle the balance of the comedy.

Ten Roadside Theater players will pay their respect to the Willard Hotel's "Drunkard" tomorrow night, reciprocating a visit paid by the Roof Players when the Roadsideers were putting on P. T. Barnum's melodrama recently.

Howdy, Brook Johns. We had the pleasure yesterday of making the acquaintance of Brook Johns, who energetically delivered his heavy frame to this sanctum to announce that his new supper club will be opened on September 15. He's more enthusiastic than ever about the club's most unusual feature, a landing field for airplanes. Says to drop in some time. Location: Olney, Md.

From Loew's Fox: "What local denizens may expect from the picture war of George Washington University this season can be gleaned from the screen of Loew's Fox Theater starting Friday (today), when exclusive pictures of the team's first workouts will be shown."

From Warner Bros' Earle: "Exclusive pictures of the football squad of the George Washington University, who made a great name for themselves last year, taken at Camp Letts, Md., their training quarters, will be shown on the screens for the first time today (Friday) at Warner Bros' Earle and Metropolitan Theaters."

We guess that's being exclusive, all right.

Who remembers Gloria Swanson and Rudolph Valentino in "Beyond the Rocks?"

Miss Bacon Makes Debut At Westbury

Representative's Daughter Presented to Society at Dance.

Mrs. Robert Bacon Gives Party for Second Grandchild.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.
Of all the brilliant parties given by Mrs. Robert Bacon, widow of the one-time United States Ambassador to France, at her country place, Old Acres, at Westbury, Long Island, none probably has given the hostess so much pleasure in the planning as the dances at which she has presented to society her two granddaughters, Miss Alexandra Bacon and Miss Virginia Bacon, daughters of Representative Robert Low Bacon, and Mrs. Bacon, of New York and Washington.

Two years ago on the evening of September 9 Mrs. Bacon was hostess at a supper dance at which the eldest of her sons, three daughters, Alexandria, made her debut. The dance she gave last night for the second daughter, Virginia, was in many respects, a repetition of the former.

As on the former occasion, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Low Bacon gave a dinner for their debutante daughter earlier in the evening at their estate, Arlough, not far from the hostess' lovely old farm house, but that was practically a repetition of their participation in the festivities.

Informal Decorations

The debutante, who wore a white tulle frock, received alone with her grandmother at the entrance to the ballroom, which opens directly on the large hall, and which has been the setting for so many notable entertainments, among them a dance the senior Mrs. Bacon gave for his royal highness, the Prince of Wales, on his visit to Long Island.

The long, winding driveway that leads to the house was illuminated with floodlights, and the lawns adjoining the house were lighted by smaller yellow ground bulbs and by the old-fashioned lamp posts that are permanent fixtures of this old homestead. The floral decorations were most informal, and reflected the excellent taste of the hostess, who personally supervised every detail of the preparations with an enthusiasm that any debutante would envy.

Vases of flowers from the gardens and greenhouses decorated the large ballroom and the tables at which supper was served in the adjoining dining room, the center of which was kept clear for dancing. There was also dancing in the large yellow marquee, lined with egg-shell silk, which had been erected on the wide terrace.

Whitney's Entertain

Yellow was the predominating color of the decorations, and Japanese lanterns in this tone were strung along the terrace, which had been added to give the effect of a lawn, and illuminated a long promenade leading into the gardens, where blue floodlights simulated moonlight.

Mr. and Mrs. George Whitney, the latter an aunt of the debutante, entertained at a dinner, later taking their guests to the dance. Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. Gardner were also dinner hosts at their place, the Corners, Westbury.

Miss Bacon will be presented to Capital society later in the winter, as was her elder sister two seasons ago, probably at the charming Bacon home on F street, where so many delightful parties are given during the months that Mr. and Mrs. Bacon spend in Washington.

The youngest of the three sisters, Miss Martha Bacon, is a student at Foxcroft School, near Middleburg, Va., and will not be presented to society for several years.

Family Active in Politics.
Miss Bacon's father is busy campaigning for reelection to Congress on the Republican ticket, and her uncle, Mr. Casper C. Bacon, is the Republican nominee for Governor of Massachusetts.

The debutante's paternal grandfather, who acquired a large fortune as a partner in the Morgan banking firm, was a direct descendant of Nathaniel Bacon, who came to this country from England early in the seventeenth century and who settled at Barnstable, Mass.

He served as Assistant Secretary of State and was appointed by the late President Taft to the position of Ambassador to France. His widow, the former Miss Martha Cowdin, has devoted much of her time in recent years to politics and to her garden, which is one of the finest on Long Island. The debutante's mother is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Murray, of this city and Midriver Farm, Clayton, N. Y.

Ruth Gilbert Becomes Bride Of Mr. Hayes

Wed at All Souls Church; Leave on Honeymoon to Florida.

A simple but impressive ceremony took place at All Souls Unitarian Church, Sixteenth and Harvard streets, yesterday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock, when Miss Ruth Louise Gilbert, only daughter of Mrs. A. Louise Gilbert and the late Mr. John Carleton Gilbert, of this city, became the bride of Mr. Robert Duncan Hayes, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edson D. Hayes, of Tampa, Fla.

The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Dr. Stuart A. Rice, assistant director of the Bureau of the Census. Mrs. Rice was matron of honor and Miss Betty Kerbey bridesmaid. Mr. Joseph Moran was best man, and six of the bridegroom's fraternity brothers were ushers.

Mr. Hayes is a member of Delta Phi Epsilon Fraternity of the School of Foreign Service of Georgetown University. He is employed in the United States Department of Commerce.

Tenant Court, Dignified and Dingy, Emanates Humor and Hopelessness

Judge Mary O'Toole Decides for Eviction or Delay.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

THE room is small, as court-rooms go, and dingy. In the center stand men and women, their faces as clean of expression as if they had been washed with a damp gray cloth.

Toward the front of the room are four sad-looking chairs and a narrow wooden bench like those in country churches. The bench, the chairs are filled with nondescript creatures. Some of these are colored. Occasionally they look briefly behind them at the people standing—white people.

There are colored people standing too. They ease their bodies against the wall. They look as if they would eventually grow into the wall, become a part of it. Only their eyes seem alive. They are focused on the far end of the room where a debonaire young man calls out names as he flips through a tall stack of print-covered papers.

The young man is the clerk of the court. His manner is brisk, his eyes lively. But his voice is shot through with boredom. It is an old story to him. Morning after morning he calls the roll of a small herd of men and women who have not paid their rent. As he drones their names and the names of their landlords, a voice says tersely, "dismissed," or sometimes, "judgment."

Landlord's Proxy.

The voice belongs to a landlord's representative. Lawyers seldom appear in the landlord and tenant court.

A group of the representatives stands on either side of the clerk's desk. Most of them have the earnest appearance of young law students. They turn their backs on the small, stolid herd in the center of the room. They seem a little ashamed to be caught in such drab surroundings. Their clothes, almost without exception, need pressing.

Among them are several older men, rather seedy, rather compassionate looking. Frequently they glance at the silent men and women who have come to court to tell the judge when they will pay their rent.

Sometimes when the brisk young clerk calls a figure disembarasses himself from the herd to step near the clerk's desk. From that point it is permissible to address the judge.

Payment Deferred.

A huge colored woman shambles to the front as her name is called. She motions back a pickaninny in pink shirt and faded yellow trousers as he attempts to follow her, tugging at her skirt. The huge woman seems to shrink as she draws near the bench.

"Mrs. Johnson," asks the judge, "when are you going to pay your rent?"

The judge is a woman, Mary O'Toole. Her voice is kind. Her wide mouth hovers on the brink of a friendly smile. The colored woman becomes expansive. "I aims to pay it Friday."

"Yes, but will you pay it then?" "Well, it's this way, judge. I got part of it and I aims to get the rest of it Friday, sure."

Judge O'Toole turns to the representative of the woman's landlord. He signifies with a resigned nod that he is willing to wait until Friday for the rent money.

The colored woman bows slightly in the general direction of the judge, gathers up the frightened pickaninny and struts majestically from the courtroom.

Humbled Dignity.

Suddenly a slender, gray-haired woman starts toward the front of the room. Her name has been called. There is an air of gentility and dignity about her. Her neat print dress is pale from many washings. She leans forward and speaks to the judge in such low tones the herd in the center can't hear what she is saying. But the herd is disinterested.

The judge, at the end of the soft-spoken explanation, announces to the landlord's representative that the woman will pay her rent Friday. The judge grants a stay until Monday, if it is found necessary.

"That will take you over the week-end," she smiles at the woman. The woman ducks her head and slips quietly from the room.

A gangling colored man in overalls clumps to the bench. He leans his elbow on it and talks to the judge in a companionable fashion. His scraggly gray mustache quivers as he chats informally about his financial difficulties.

Everything's Gone Wrong.

"When can you pay your rent, Mr. Brown?" the judge asks coolly. "Well, I've been having a mighty hard time. Everything's been going wrong lately. I don't know what's going to become of us all. 'Deed I don't. It sure is—"

"Yes, but when do you think you can pay your rent?" interrupts the judge, not unkindly.

"I certainly have been having a hard time here lately—got nine, ten children. Seems like I can't hardly make a living like I—"

"What about that rent, Mr. Brown?"

"Well, I aims to pay it Saturday." He pries himself loose from the bench and waves blithely to the judge as he shuffles across the room, battered felt hat rolled tight in his hands.

Sex Appeal Dashed.

A girl in a red-and-white polka-dot dress several inches shorter than it should be, saunters up to the clerk's desk. Her name is called. She leans over the young, lively-eyed clerk. She puts on little act for his benefit. By turns she is gay and sad. The young man is embarrassed.

"Talk to the judge, please," he says. But he smiles as he says it. The girl smiles back. She begins over again with a recital of her troubles.

"Make her speak up, Joe," says the judge to the clerk. "Tell her to talk loud enough for us to hear." The girl's face hardens. The judge is a woman. The girl had much rather deal with a man. Soon she is explaining she will have her

As a judge of the District's Municipal Court, Judge Mary O'Toole takes her turn at sitting in the Landlord and Tenant Court. The judges rotate in this position. Although Judge O'Toole says it is an unwelcome chore, she manages it so graciously both landlords and tenants usually leave the courtroom in good humor.

Plaids Brighten Campus Styles

Velveten Makes a Showing, Particularly in Blouses and Scarfs.

NEW YORK, Sept. 3 (P).—This year the classic sweater-and-skirt ensemble of the campus is enlivened by plaids, velvet jackets and blouses, woolsens, berets, and—for the more formal occasions of college life—tunic dresses and coats.

Plaid skirts with velvet jackets that may also be worn as blouses and scarfs to match the skirt are both gay and useful. But there is, as ever, the tweed skirt with its sweater set of pull-on and cardigan, preferably of soft, imported wool.

The tweed skirt may not be part of a suit. The three and four-piece suits in combinations of tweed and jersey form the backbone of a college wardrobe.

The separate topcoat of tweed, with collar of racoon or other durable fur, is also an important item in college clothes. Worn with either a beret or a tailored felt, it is perfectly at home on the campus and indispensable for motoring and football games.

Fur coats shown for college girls are of the adaptable sort that can be casual if worn with sports things or dressed up for week-ends with more formal accessories. Nutria, made in swaggy style, is shown in a collection for the campus. Leopard cat is another fur for the campus. For the college girl with a larger allowance, Alaska sealskin in three-quarter length with scarf collar is a possible choice.

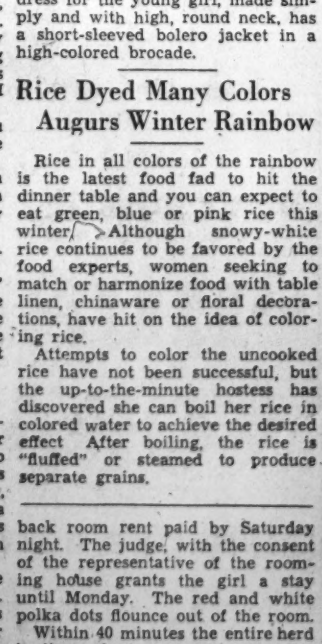

Evening dresses in the college collections range from the naive to the sophisticated. For the girl in her first year a crepe dress with high neckline and square, quilted collar is shown. Another evening dress for the young girl, made simply and with high, round neck, has a short-sleeved bolero jacket in a high-colored brocade.

Attempts to color the uncooked rice have not been successful, but the up-to-the-minute hostess has discovered she can boil her rice in colored water to achieve the desired effect. After boiling, the rice is "fluffed" or steamed to produce separate grains.

back room rent paid by Saturday night. The judge, with the consent of the representative of the rooming house grants the girl a stay until Monday. The red and white polka dots flounce out of the room. Within 40 minutes the entire herd is disposed of.

The bailiff shoos out a trio of giggling colored women. The clerk gathers up his sheaf of papers. Judge Mary O'Toole relaxes in her chair on the bench. Another day in Washington's Landlord and Tenant Court is over.

Collegiennes are purchasing dresses such as these so their working hours at college will be no less chic than their week-ends. To the left is a gray blouse with a two-color skirt. The girl standing is dressed in red, white and blue plaid.

19th Century Scanties Fought To Prove Their Respectability

Through the Directorate Period of Near-Nudity They Were Frowned On, and Likewise During the Overstuffed Era When the Widespread Crinolines Were Worn

Scanties had a hard time proving their respectability in two fashion eras of opposed theories—one of much undress and one of much dress. This is the fifth in a series of articles on scanties and their lack.

By Irene Hasbrook.

EIGHT ounces. Less if possible, but never more. That was the fashionable weight for an entire outfit of feminine clothing as they wore it in the beginning of the nineteenth century.

From an era of heavy-weight dresses, liberally bolstered from within by five or six stiff petticoats, style threw aside all restraint and went as close to the nude as it has, outside of Africa, for centuries and centuries. The setting was France as Napoleon was rising into power. The reason was a renewed interest in antiquity as pushed by the then current excavations of Pompeii. The result was something remarkable.

"Les elegantes" of the Directorate period went on their gay way clad in straight, figure-clinging, classical dresses, most of them transparent or nearly so. These costumes were frequently slit up one side; not a respectable slash, such as 1934 evening dresses are receiving, but a bold one, leaving little to the imagination of the observer. Corsets were put into the moth chest, for possible reference later on. Chemises were laid away as being too much of a good thing.

Fashionable Deaths. The mortality rate from influenza was stupendous among these nearly unclad ladies. But those who died did it happily in the knowledge they were still in style, and the fashion went on.

They did wear some underthings, but not many. Whatever they wore (and no one seems very knowing about them), they were close fitting and as thin as possible. This astonishing period in undress was sandwiched between two of the most fully clothed eras in recent history. The one that followed, the crinoline, beat even the eighteenth century in respectability as evinced by quantities of garments, particularly those underneath. The crinolines, which appeared as the neo-classical style went out, called for many petticoats, shifts, chemises and other near-unidentifiable and obsolete unmentionables.

What they did not call for was scanties. For scanties, through at least half of the nineteenth century, and probably longer, were considered immoral. You just didn't wear them, or anything like them, if you were a lady. Lack of panties, in the twentieth century regarded as a trifle dubious, was then a mark of gentility.

Not So Contrary. This seemingly backward way of looking at the matter wasn't so contrary when it is considered women hadn't worn bifurcated garments of any sort since the dawn of history. That is, outside of Oriental countries.

There was another thing, too. Ever since women had taken up the profession of the stage, actresses had worn calicoes, garments which resembled circus performers' tights. Things like this were all right for the stage, ladies of the day admitted, but anything of the type was too risqué for every-day life.

So for at least two reasons scanties, when introduced, were regarded as being unwomanly.

The method of introduction is mysterious, but one of the most plausible versions of it goes like this:

Young girls of crinoline times wore pantaloettes which technically were not panties at all, but frilled leggings suspended from the waist by string. Somehow the string never quite did right by the crinoline misses; there was always imminent danger of pantaloette collapse. After years of this, gradual experiment evolved drawers which were really drawers, and not subject to the vagaries of one piece of string.

A Royal Sponsor. How drawers became reputable after they were introduced is another puzzle in dress history. However, the majority of learned opinion gives credit to Empress Eugenie, one of the greatest style arbiters of all time, for starting the fad, and by giving this ponderous form of scanties royal sanction establishing them as respectable.

When panties finally did become genteel they were so genteel they weren't mentioned. There was little small talk about scanties in the nineteenth century—first they weren't mentioned because ladies didn't wear them, then they weren't mentioned because ladies did wear them.

Read in tomorrow's Post about scanties when they weren't scanties, but genuine drawers—scanties in their most voluminous and untampering form.

It was my second husband's cruelty to her, and his determination to have the spending of money which I get twice a year from a small trust fund left me by my father, which caused us to separate.

I ran pretty heavily into debt during my second marriage and will have to get something to do until I can pay off these debts. I am young looking, strong, healthy, and every one says I am a good housekeeper, but I have never had a day's experience working outside my own home.

Could you give me any suggestions as to how to look for a job, or what job you think I would be best suited to handle. I have submitted my furnished apartment, keeping an room for my daughter and myself. My daughter hasn't got a job and can't seem to find one she likes. She has tried being a waitress, but some of the men were so insulting I insisted on her staying home rather than associate with them.

HOPEFUL.

Home Offers a Living. DEAR HOPEFUL: In these days of working mothers it should not be hard to find a place as housekeeper in a home where there are small children to be taken care of. So many young mothers, with past experience in the business world, have been forced by the depression shortage of jobs for men to return to the work they did before marriage, in order to keep their children fed and clothed, and the bill collector off the doorstep.

Of course, your daughter represents a problem, because a housekeeper is usually required to live in, and you can not supervise her as closely as you might like and need to, if your time were taken up by duties in another's home. Some kind of occupation should be found for her, if at all possible.

Left to her own devices, with nothing to absorb and healthily tax her mental and physical energies, she is likely to become fretful, wilful, selfish and demanding. It is bad psychology to school a daughter of 18 in complete dependence upon a parent. Rather, she should be looked to for some contribution.

It will train her in independence and responsibility. Perhaps she might find a place as child's nurse, if she is not fitted for the business world. Since she has a room of her own, she could afford to take on for only small pay, plus her meals. She might get a job as mother's helper. Have you tried advertising for such a place for her?

If the prospect of acting as housekeeper and finding some job for your daughter doesn't appeal, you might repossess yourself of your apartment and make it into a cheerful boarding home for employed girls. If you could spare as many as two rooms, they might be arranged to accommodate either two or four girls.

Business girls are always on the alert to find lodging under a roof which provides a clean, orderly, homelike, informal atmosphere, good food and a pleasant, accommodating hostess. By such an arrangement you could create an income probably equal to that netted by the sublease of your apartment and yet continue as mistress in your own home.

Smocks, which used to be pretty blah looking outfits, have acquired a little chic. They are not made in the old depressingly uniform pattern of models.

Housewives can get attractive ones for kitchen wear. Garbed in one of these she need not fear being mistaken for the hired help answering the door bell. Laboratory workers may look soignée now instead of shapless. Senographers have taken to wearing simple but decorative versions of the smock, finding they save their clothes and look just as well as if they weren't saving them. Girl artists can now look better than they ever have before.

Wide revers, jaunty bows under the chin, tailored belts and shirrings are some of the tricks that lift smocks to smartness.

Pacifist Takes Militaristic Attitude Fighting "War Against War Racket"

Appeals on the Grounds of Economics, Not of Sentimentality.

DOWN the flag-lined avenues of the world millions of men have marched to needless death. Cheered by throngs maddened by patriotic frenzy, inspired by leaders who assured them it was glorious to die that truth and justice might live, they have marched to spine-thrilling melodies to face the murder glorified by the name of war.

When thinking men have protested, they have been condemned as "professional pacifists" and "impractical idealists."

"But now the time has come to put the peace campaign on a practical working basis," said Mrs. Estelle Sternberger, executive director of World Peaceways, yesterday. Mrs. Sternberger, who is in Washington to attend the hearings of the munitions investigation, has for five years been leading the campaign which helped to bring about the present armistices investigation.

"Men have been too blinded by patriotic fervor to recognize the fate that sent them to destruction," Mrs. Sternberger said.

The Profiteers. "A few men greedy for the money, the sale of death-dealing weapons, the increased business profits brought by war, have willed their death. They have stood on the sidelines and cheered, have shed hypocritical tears for the dead and wounded."

"We are waging a war against the war racket," said Mrs. Sternberger, "and we are doing it in a modern, practical, efficient manner. We are using the press, radio, advertising and motion pictures to tell people the truth about war."

"We are not silly pacifists who are afraid to die. We make our appeal on the basis of economics. We are now on the economic front because we were on the war front. Every war costs every flag-waving nation billions of dollars, the masses of the people suffer to pay those debts, while a few greedy men grow rich."

Mrs. Sternberger, who has been executive director of World Peaceways since it was founded, has "always been against war," she says. Her study of economics and government, her interest in humanitarian movements have strengthened her belief that it is only through the education of the people that war can be prevented. Mrs. Sternberger is a graduate of the University of Cincinnati and has a master's degree from the University of Chicago.

Spreading Tentacles of Peace. World Peaceways, since it was founded in 1929, has enlisted more than 50,000 members. It is not an American organization, but world-wide. Thriving units have been established in Great Britain, France, Holland, Switzerland and Canada. In April Mrs. Sternberger will return to Europe to organize units in other countries. With her she will carry a copy of the "Big Book in the World," which is entitled "War, The Superracket," and which has been signed by 1,000,000 leaders throughout the world. The book is a petition for peace.

Other aims are to eliminate private ownership and private profit from the manufacture of munitions and to reduce armaments in every country.

"We are going to advertise this hell called war," she asserted. "We are going to show people what it costs to wage war. Not only in human lives, but in future loss. The money spent on war can be used to clear up slums. If war must be waged, it should be waged on poverty and ignorance and disease."

Storm Jameson noted British novelist, recently signed the peace book. She wrote Mrs. Sternberger, "The traitors when the next war threatens are not the pacifists, but the strong-armed patriots."

The superiority of the Army over the Navy, or vice versa, has never been definitely established, but a desperate attempt was made on the cocktail porch of the Shoreham the other evening to settle the question once and for all time. The weapons used were human voices raised in song.

A group of Navy officers stood in one corner singing "Anchors Aweigh." In the other corner some Army officers rumbled throatily about "Caissons Rolling Along." The result was splitting.

Patricia Mencia is treasurer of the Roseland, N. J., team which won the North-South skeet championship last week. Patricia is slim, dark-eyed and a very pretty native of Havana. V. C. Thompson, Jr., a blond, curly-haired skeet shooter with the local club, did not relish her interest in the visiting team member.

"Ah, the chairman of the Republican National committee! I expect we will cross swords in the coming elections."

"I am at your service, sir," replied Mr. Fletcher, bowing almost to the waist as if doffing a casque, in the manner of a cavalier, accepting the challenge of the code duello.

THE pace of the age has indelibly set its stamp on women. The craze to "get there" in a hurry which has seen the advent of stream-lined trains, planes and motor cars of prodigious speed, is reflected in a woman's way of walking.

She seems to summon all the forces of her energy to propel her forward, regardless of grace and poise. Her feet try vainly to keep up with her head which is thrust out several inches. As a result her shoulders sag and her whole figure is thrown out of proportion.

If she stops a moment to collect her wits she can, if she pleases, walk slowly and gracefully. But it is the urge to hurry, to get there, to race with time, that throws her into a badly balanced walk.

Lady Hamilton's Example. And yet all charmers and authorities on charm say that a woman's walk is greatly to her advantage or disadvantage. They point out that slow, measured steps in a natural rhythm bespeak a grace to which all men pay homage.

Lady Hamilton, the bewitching and beautiful Emma who was Lord Nelson's light of love, was trained by Sir Charles Greville, famous collector and art connoisseur of his time, who might really be said to have discovered her. He held that grace of movement was a prime essential of beauty in woman and his first commandment in Emma's charm catalogue was never to be in a hurry.

If his advice could be heeded today the world might be better by a few less distorted walkers.

Americans Conspicuous. Europeans and many cosmopolitan Americans admit that the American girl may be easily spotted in a foreign country either by her loud voice and careless manners or else by her half-running, uneven walk.

The surest means to counteract such a defect is to call attention to it. A woman doesn't have to attend dancing or gym classes to walk well. She simply has to put her mind on it.

Nine out of ten women would find that by consciously refraining from hurrying they would assimilate an easy grace, "get there" just as quickly and be far less weary at the end of the day.

Smock Takes On Smart New Lines

This Chemist Sells Beauty Custom-Made

Compounds Own Cosmetics and Fits Patrons Individual

By Ruth Anne Davis.

A WOMAN who looks drab, and feels "drabber," can spend one hour in a certain beauty salon and come out looking like a million dollars.

The gentleman who runs the shop is a cosmetic chemist and every ten days he brings out his test tubes and numerous ingredients and mixes a new batch of creams. In this way he is sure to have only the freshest and the purest.

The operators in the shop are trained to use these preparations in the most approved manner. With one they do an excellent job of cleansing. With another they tone and stimulate the skin, and with another they freshen it up. They use a marvelous muscle oil to firm the contour. Each client is carefully studied and her skin treated in the manner most remedial for her individual skin problems. That's the joy of going there. You can know from the time you enter you aren't going to have the same things done to you that are done to Mrs. Tom, Dick and Harry. If your pores are exceptionally large, they're assiduously worked on. If your skin is dry and prone to wrinkles, it is treated accordingly. Numbers of women with wrinkled necks and sagging muscles say this is the one place they can go to correct the trouble.

While the facial is in full swing you can have an electric treatment, too. You don't have to. It's up to the client. But if she's ever had one she always comes back for another. This treatment tones the nerves through an increased blood supply to all parts of the body. The creams, of course, are more easily absorbed into the skin, and therefore more effective, through means of this electric system.

If you have some skin problem you really want studied, you'll be given very special attention. If you feel all worn out and whipped down, one facial plus the electric treatment will give you new vitality.

Incidentally the electric treatment costs nothing extra, and the facials are remarkably reasonable.

New "Slates" for School.

What changes have transpired? The senior Joe, who wrote on his slate, "I love you so," can stand by these days and see Junior Joe trot off to school with a pocket pencil engraved in gold with which to do his scribbling.

A downtown store which has a department crammed with all the fine and fancy school equipment one child could ever need has little leather cases filled with pencils and a rule. Each pencil has the owner's name engraved on it in gold, and, of course, so does the case. The outfit costs but 50 cents.

Soap for That Feeble Tan.

Many of those who sought the great out-of-doors this summer are home again now seeking some good means for bleaching their skins.

The golden bronze which the summer sun bestowed was all very well with light clothes but now with uncertain shades of green and blue, black and brown, it becomes less than nifty. Besides, even the best of tans lose their glow and become dull and unbecoming.

One quick and efficient bleaching means at their disposal is a cake of soap. Not just any soap, mind you, but a new one put out by a beauty specialist, who meets the demands of each season as they arrive. Wash your face and hands with this soap regularly," she says, "and your tan will very shortly fade out to fairness."

It's a dare that hundreds are taking, and congratulating themselves that they took it!

Umbrella in a Pocket.

A tiny parcel done up neatly in small silk bag looks interesting and puzzling. It seems almost a miracle that a full-size umbrella, an emerger from such close quarters. But emerge it does in a glory of checks or solid colors. The handle holds out, the ribs pull up and presto—before your eyes a full-size umbrella springs into being.

Travelers appreciate the compactness of this arrangement, for they can tuck away their umbrellas in the corner of their suitcase, hoppers, instead of being bothered all morning with a burdensome umbrella, can carry this one round in a coat pocket. Automobileists frequently keep one in their car pocket.

The checks are in black and white or two tones of blue. Solid colors include brown, blue, green, and black.

Tolleries for a Song.

When it comes to buying power, cents is a little dynamo in a downtown store. Shoppers will find that with this amount they may purchase a tall box of talcum powder, plus a large box of dusting powder, plus some very excellent soap. All of these are attractively packaged to match, they come in four scents, lilac, carnation, violet, and gardenia.

The Capital Kitchen

By Susan Mills.

LEFTOVERS are almost always a problem. Easy to prepare, yet difficult to make different. The problem is to make the family forget they ate the same thing yesterday.

Here's how:

Turnips and Carrots.

1 cup cold boiled carrots, 1 cup cold boiled turnips, 1 cup medium white sauce, 1 teaspoon sugar, 1 teaspoon lemon juice, salt and pepper, buttered toast.

Cut the vegetables in cubes. Add the white sauce, sugar and lemon juice. Season with salt and pepper. When thoroughly heated, serve on toast, garnished with parsley.

Macedoine of Vegetables.

2 carrots, cooked and diced, 1 cup peas, cooked, 1 cup string beans, cooked, 1 onion, 1/2 cup celery, sliced, 2 teaspoons sugar, 1 tablespoon butter, 1/2 cup meat stock or bouillon, salt and pepper.

Slice the onion. Fry until soft in the butter. Add the other ingredients. Simmer gently until the vegetables are well heated and the stock is absorbed. Other combinations may be used according to what one has on hand.

Escallop of Leftovers.

2 cups cooked flaked fish, 2 cups cooked diced potatoes, 1 cup cooked diced celery, 1 green pepper, chopped, 2 cups grated American cheese, 1 1/2 cups cream sauce, salt, pepper, fresh tomato, green pepper. Combine fish with vegetables. Add 1 1/2 cups grated cheese, the cream sauce and seasonings to taste. Place in a casserole, sprinkle with remaining cheese and decorate the top with 1/4 sections of tomato and strips of green pepper, radiating to the center. Bake about 30 minutes in a moderate oven, 350°.

How to Keep Well

The Deadly Auto.

THE United States lost in battle in the World War nearly 50,000 soldiers. This includes those killed in action and those who succumbed to wounds. For the period in which the war was waged, the world conflict, the average loss per year was 70. These figures do not include those who died from disease.

Each day automobiles are responsible for approximately 90 deaths in the United States and the rate is increasing. Figures already available for 1934 show a high peak of automobile deaths in January, a drop in February and March, and with the beginning of the tourist season, a steady upsurge in the number of deaths. In 1933, 33,500 persons in the United States died as the result of motor car accidents.

Half Are Pedestrians.

More than one-half of those killed are pedestrians. While a proportion of fatalities is due to carelessness or bravado on the part of pedestrians, a larger proportion may be blamed upon the reckless irresponsibility of the automobile driver. Reliable reports indicate that two-thirds of the accidents are due to careless driving. In 1933 in this country, although 800 persons were killed crossing the street against the light, 3,390 were killed while crossing with the light.

Should our country be visited by a preventable disease that claimed somewhere around 33,000 or 34,000 lives per year, with 25 times that with the beginning of the tourist season, and physicians would not rest until some effective plan of control had been devised.

It is said in extension that the loss of life is not great in comparison with the immense traffic for which automobiles are utilized. Accident prevention in industry and on our railroads has been so successful, as measured by results, that we have no right to assume that automobile traffic accidents can not be controlled.

Lots of Power.

Automobiles have been increased in efficiency. They have so much power and are capable of such high speed that only persons who possess intelligence, caution, and courtesy should be permitted to operate them. Some States require automobile drivers to be licensed. So far this means but little. There is usually no examination for eyesight, for intelligence, nor for regard for the lives of others. As has been said, "Cars are now built for an intelligence many drivers do not possess."

Unless a sharp reduction occurs in the remaining months of this year, 1934 will set a record for both automobile injuries and fatalities. Accidental deaths from all causes the country over show about the same figures as in former years. This means that the great increase in automobile deaths has been offset by safety campaigns in industry. Millions have been spent in safeguarding workmen with most satisfactory results.

Until killed recently one-quarter of those killed by automobiles were children. Through campaigns of education, the establishment of safety zones in the vicinity of schools, and the cooperation of police departments, the saving in the lives of children has been approximately 18 per cent. An automobile driver, no matter how lethargic his conscience, usually respects the schoolboy patrol. School authorities fortunately select for this important duty kids who are intelligent and courteous.

There always have been and always will be unavoidable accidents. We will always have absent-minded people, both pedestrians and automobile drivers. The situation is, however, sufficiently serious to warrant greater attention from an informed public.

Ensembles for Rainy Days.

Raincoat ensembles are the latest thing for stormy weather. Some of them are made as one-piece coats with detachable swagger coats to go over them. Made in plaid or checks they give somewhat the effect of knitted sports ensembles.

HONEYMOON MOUNTAIN

by Frances Shelley Wees

PILAR came downstairs early next morning. She said coolly, "I find that I must go back at once to San Francisco, Mrs. Larned. I defeat good-bys so dreadfully that I meant just to slip away. I'm terribly sorry to go."

"But my child," Grandmother said, horrified, "you've had no breakfast!"

Pilar rose. "I'll go out and get my car while I'm waiting for breakfast."

Bryn rose at once. "I'll get it. Pilar, if you'll give me the keys. Silently she held them out. He took them and strode off across the grass, whistling blithely.

"Bryn is such a dear," Grandmother said fondly. "I don't know how we ever lived without him, before he came."

Pilar did not speak. Tubby came clattering back down the stairs. "Well," he said jovially, "here we all are, eh? What've you got your hat on for, Pilar? You're not leaving us, surely?"

Pilar gave him a disdainful glance. "I suppose you'd be heart-broken."

Terrible Blow.

"Well, you know how it is, Tubby said, cheerfully. "I suppose I'll get over it, but the blow will be terrible. Terrible!"

"The way you children talk to each other," Grandmother said with amusement.

Bryn sailed out to the road on the other side of the willows, in a flash of blue between the branches. Pilar rose.

"If you don't mind, Mrs. Larned," she said, "I won't wait for breakfast, after all. Really, I must go. Thank you so much for a perfectly gorgeous visit."

"You won't slip along in that bus," Tubby said, drily. "Unless you want to drive on a flat. Your left rear tire is what I'd call a complete washout."

Pilar looked at him. She looked at the tire, spread out on both sides of the wheel. Bryn got out of the car and looked at it, too.

"I suppose I'll have to wait until it's changed," Pilar said, so viciously that Grandmother looked up in surprise.

"I suppose you will," Tubby replied, and got up with a groan.

Bryn was taking the spare tire off. He looked at it critically.

"Well, Tubby, my dear beloved friend," he said affectionately, "I suppose you will," Tubby replied, and got up with a groan.

am afraid that I shall have to break the sad news to you. The spare is flat, too. So, my boy, all hands on deck."

"Suffering cow," Tubby said disgustedly.

Had Flat Tire.

Pilar ran down the steps and looked at the tires. Her face, Deborah noticed, had a drawn look beneath the rouge. "I forgot it," she said. "I had a flat on the way up here. Listen—one of you give me a spare off your car, will you? I'll take hours to patch one of these."

"Oh, not hours," Bryn protested. Half an hour, perhaps. We can't let you go off with a flat spare, either. It's too dangerous."

"Give me a tire from one of yours, then," she said.

"Not from the Bellairs," Bryn replied. "They're inches bigger than yours. Will your tires fit the car, Tub?"

"They might," Tubby announced. "But I'm not going to look and see. I don't know why it's any easier or less trouble in the long run for Pilar to wait while we fix hers, than it is for us to patch it on my car. You didn't get a telegram, you know. Sit still and have your breakfast while you're waiting."

"I think you are very ungentlemanly," Pilar said angrily.

"Do you? Well, then, to absolve myself from such criminality—my tires wouldn't fit either. What are you in such a hurry to get away for, anyway?" he inquired.

Eugene Roared.

"Oh," she said with an exasperated gesture, "it doesn't matter. I'll wait."

Madeline and Sally came downstairs and had to have the tire situation explained all over again.

"Quarter to nine," Tubby said, as they finished the first tire. "How much longer, Bryn?"

"I don't know," Bryn said dubiously. "Maybe 15 minutes."

Pilar got up and swung herself off the veranda to stand beside her car. Tubby looked at her. "This'll teach you a lesson," he said. "Next time you want to make a quick get-away, Pilar, you want to get things in readiness first."

There came suddenly the roar of a laboring small engine from the road at the left. Deborah was looking at Pilar. Pilar heard the motor, too; she glanced again at her watch, at Bryn, at the door of the house, at the road.

A small battered roadster turned in at the gate and came to a stop just behind Pilar's car.

Deborah's heart dropped like lead at the sight of the driver; just for a second, thinking of Pilar and her strange anxiety to get away, she had not realized what the sound of that motor meant.

Deborah Trembled.

As the car stopped, Bryn rose. For a moment Bryn and Graham stood facing each other. Then, without a word, perfectly calm, Bryn moved forward and slid the mended tire on to Pilar's rack. He brushed off his hands, and turned toward the veranda.

Deborah got up slowly, stiffly, and went over beside Grandmother. Her face was deathly.

"Why, my darling!" Grandmother exclaimed. "Why are you so frightened?"

Deborah lifted her eyes and met Bryn's in helpless anguish. Bryn was smiling a steady, warm, comforting smile that seemed to tell her that everything was all right, that she had nothing to fear. He came up the steps and stood beside Grandmother's chair.

Stuart Graham, with that black smile of his, came across the grass from the driveway. He approached the steps. His eyes moved over Sally and Madeline, caught Pilar back in the shadow, rested on Deborah's face with a distant look of surprise and resentment, as if he had not remembered that she looked like this, and felt cheated to discover what he had lost. They fell at last on Grandmother.

He stopped on the lowest step. He faced Grandmother.

Graham Appears.

"Good morning," he said brightly. Grandmother inclined her head. "Good morning," she replied.

"You are Mrs. Larned," he stated. "I think you have heard of me. My name is Graham."

"Yes," Grandmother said, courteously.

He frowned a little, and his eyes flicked to Bryn.

"Perhaps you don't understand. My name is Graham, Mrs. Larned—Stuart Graham."

"Indeed?" Grandmother murmured, entirely calm. Her pulse beat was swift but steady.

He stiffened at Grandmother's "Indeed?" "Stuart Graham," he repeated distinctly. "From Boston."

Grandmother inclined her head.

"How do you do?" she said coolly, with perfect self-possession. "I knew your grandparents, I believe. And your father, too. I hope they are quite well?"

Grandmother's face was white, but her eyes were bright. Bryn's hand was lying lightly on Grandmother's shoulder. Deborah shut her own eyes and told herself that she was dreaming again.

Suspected Ruse.

"Say," Graham demanded roughly of Bryn, "what's the gag? This isn't Mrs. Larned herself. It's somebody dressed up to look like her."

"I am Mrs. Larned," Grandmother said, quietly. "You are Stuart Graham, and that this . . ."

he indicated Bryn contemptuously, "that this fellow is nothing more than an impostor."

"This is all you have to say to me?" Grandmother asked.

Graham stood regarding her with disbelieving eyes. Then "Your husband took every precaution to see that Deborah and I should marry each other, and without any compunction whatever you let her marry another man. What about me? I've been banking on marrying her all my life!"

"I am sure that 'banking' is a very well-chosen word," Grandmother commented.

He flushed darkly. "I suppose you realize that she doesn't get the money, now that she's married to this smart guy who's got you wound around his finger?"

"Yes," Grandmother said quietly. "So you know what you're doing, eh?"

Not His Affair.

"Perfectly well," Grandmother replied, and Deborah looked at her dizzily. "However, I can not think that this is any of your affair. Your interest, it seems to me, is a trifle belated."

Grandmother put Deborah's hand firmly away from her, and stood up. And I will add, now that I have seen you, that I shall thank God every moment of the remainder of my life that it is none of your concern, that when you had the opportunity to make it so, you thought up beneath your respect."

Graham drew back. "You believe anything you're told, don't you?" he sneered. "I suppose you think this is a very romantic marriage, this match between the girl and a young rolling-in-gold millionaire who pretends to fall in love with your precious granddaughter and marries her at sight. Do you know what he is? He's nothing but a cheap adventurer, buying thrills with his money. This is a new one. When he's tired of his new toy, you'll see what'll happen. He'll drop her like a wrung mop-rag."

Graham Departs.

"That's enough," Bryn said sharply. He turned to Grandmother. "Is there anything further you wish to say to him?"

"Nothing my boy," Grandmother answered steadily.

"Then," Bryn said directly to Graham, "on your way. If you know what's good for you."

Graham backed off precipitately. Tubby stood at his shoulder. "Just a minute," he said softly. "There's one more little point. Where did you get all your information about our hero? You didn't know all this last night, when we took your little pop-gun away from you and put you in with the milk."

"It's none of your business," Graham said.

"Come on," Tubby commanded, and poked him in the back with end of a tire wrench. He hesitated.

"Let him go," Bryn said sharply to Tubby. "It's obvious, isn't it?"

Pilar, back in the shadows, stirred. With a set frozen face she rose and got into her car. She started the motor, turned on two wheels and dashed off up the driveway, without a backward glance.

Bryn spoke to Graham. "If you want to repay the young lady for all she has done for you," he suggested, "you might drive along behind her until her spare tire falls off. You interrupted me before I had time to fasten it on for her."

New Fall Programs Offered By Washington Night Clubs

Brooke Johns Plans to Open "Old Barn" This Month; La Fayette and La Verne May Leave for Hollywood Soon.

By Kay Ware.

Fall is the time when all sensible bears go into trees for the winter and all outdoor night clubs go underground.

Not only are the perennial clubs putting on new fall shows, but new clubs are opening.

One of the clubs soon to be opened sounds as though it would make a large splash in the amusement pond. Brooke Johns, former Broadway headliner and Ziegfeld star, is planning to open "Brooke Johns' Old Barn" about the middle of the month.

At present the finishing touches are being put on the conversion of the huge barn at Mr. Johns' place, out Georgia avenue between Norbeck and Olney, Md., into an up-to-date night club. The club will be the center of an amusement ground to contain, among other things, a landing field, golf driving field and steeplechase and fox-hunting courses.

At least 80 years old. The barn first belonged to Mrs. Johns' great uncle, Charles Barnley, and is at least 80 years old. It wears its original brown shingle roof, has been painted a brilliant white and given large windows on three sides. The arched entrance is incased in a wall of sandstone.

Quaint carriage lanterns will light the doorway, and other old lanterns are scattered about inside. Two floor levels are equipped with hand-made tables, arranged to accommodate about 200 people, and there is roomy floor space. Some of the old beams have been kept for flooring, but on each side, where bar and straw use to be stored, hardwood has been laid for dancing.

Large wagon wheels have been hung by iron chains from the ceiling, for chandeliers. In the loft there is an old sleigh drawn by an iron horse. On the walls are racks holding harness, and horseshoe designs have been set in the floor. In the corner cupboards there is a collection of old china.

Mr. Johns has done quite a piece of workmanship in rigging up a bar. For the top he took a single piece of wood from an old hay rack, that extends the bar almost all the length of the wall.

Get Movie Offer.

It seems to be now or never, if you want to see La Fayette and La Verne, dancing at the Shoreham Hotel terrace this week. They are expected to hop a plane for Hollywood any day now, having had an offer to appear with George Raft in a new Limehouse Apache dance number for the movies.

Susan Hall, also appearing at the Shoreham, has a bewitching face reminiscent of Nancy Carroll's, and fast and accurate feet. She appears in three numbers at the Terrace, one a solo acrobatic, the other two with Walter Doe, who is considered one of the premiere male dancers native to Washington. Walter Doe's mother is the team's manager.

Versatility is Sue Roseau's middle name. In her numbers at the Shoreham Terrace she moves with equal skill from a Chinese dragon dance to a Hawaiian love dance, an Arabian slave dance, and a Harlem routine. World's Fair officials in Chicago saw her dragon dance, in which she uses lighted dragons' heads, and engaged her to teach it to the native Chinese women in the "Streets of Shanghai" village at the fair.

Tucked-away tables and conversational corners are a feature of the Lotus, in combination with an unusually spacious dance floor. This week De Angelo and Porter are doing good work in specialty dances, Paige and Merle are tap dancing, and Mary Olcott is devoting herself to the songs of Victor Herbert.

Snacks Always Wanted. Snack bars are the rage of London's younger set, particularly before the theater. There is a new tendency this year to dine lightly at one of the snack bars that have been mushrooming up, and then do more serious dining after the theater.

Washington tends to reverse the process, but the ubiquitous snack type of food is always in demand. Suggestions along this line will be made with loving thought and kindness by Teddy, headwaiter of the Mayflower Lounge.

The Mayflower Lounge is noted for its informal atmosphere. You are apt to see fine dress and golfing attire at the same session. The Lounge is intended as a place to drop in, regardless of the hour or costume.

Leon Brusloff is musically nostalgic. When those soft strains of the tune that might have been played in old Vienna come floating out on the Madrilion's dance floor, Leon's eyes seem to get a little deeper, that violin of his seems to say a little more than usual.

Whether a waltz or a tango, you might hear those tunes you hummed many years ago when you had enough money to go to the Riviera.

Nice contrast—these songs of the old country, with the latest of America's dance numbers.

Charming Indoor Scene. When all the people on the roofs and in the gardens fold up their tents like the Arabs and go indoors, it will be lucky for spots like the Lowenkeller, which has as charming an indoors as even an interested Arab could find.

Gabled ceilings and plenty of wood paneling, curving staircases going up to balconies—an idea of the Lowenkeller's interior. Also the array of Bavarian steins. Note: Steins are becoming rare and valuable. They don't make them as they used to.

If you like music—not the tom-tom variety—with your meals, you'll enjoy Saturday luncheon at Lowenkeller and Garten, 118 Connecticut avenue. Guy Scott, Lowenkeller's genial host, ever on the alert to please, has inaugurated a special Saturday afternoon musicale—music by Happy Walker's Lowenkellers.

The Playhouse, opened as a clubhouse years ago by Alice Roosevelt and a group of friends, now is a tea room. Location: N street just off Connecticut avenue. It was reopened for the fall this week. It is notably small and friendly, and serves excellent meals. Always there is a continuous flow of hot biscuits and jelly.

As the roofs close up for the winter, it's almost worth a bet that the Club Michel will be the last to go. September evenings won't be chilly there, not with the music, good dinners and drinks, the master of ceremonies, Arthur Godfrey, and all the friends you see.

Entertainers: Paul and Eva Reyes, needing no introduction; Tommy Sulters, a hill-billy. Where will the Reyes stop next?

Fireplace for Rainy Day. If you hear about a place with a fireplace, tuck the fact in the back of your head and keep it for a rainy day. Once you've seen the fireplace at the Maryland Club Gardens, you'll wish you could spend all your rainy days before it. Big sofas, and soft lights, well-blended colors, and the someone-who-is-very-important are the ingredients that go into a memorable evening.

If you want to see the latest thing in modern metal furniture, and a striking example of elaborate interior decorating, the Hi-Hat has both. One rather pathetic note: the beautiful and utterly deserted bar. They built one out in the room—just in hopes. If you go through the door to the real bar, the bartender will look wistful and say, "Gee, it's good to see somebody."

Frank Young, of WMAL fame, and Bill and Margie are entertaining this week at Jimmy Lake's Black and Gold Restaurant on Ninth street. When you stop watching the show, there is plenty of diversion on the menu.

Amy Spencer, an outstanding sepi dancing star, who has trod the boards in many Harlem night spots, will head the new winter floor revue opening at the Cotton Club, Tenth and U streets, tonight. Assisting will be Drucilla Drew and company, Walter Rastus, Johnny Veral and Tommy Miles' 12-piece orchestra.

Thirty days hath September, and that's all very well, but the important thing is that there's an R in the month. To prove it, go down to Hall's and have your oysters dressed up in cracker crumbs, or on the half shell.

U-M-M-M NOT SO GOOD—

Some whiskies are harsh and coarse to the taste. Because they're loaded with raw green liquor. And green whiskey is always harsh to the taste.

NOT SO BAD—NOT SO GOOD

Other whiskies are simply flat and tasteless. Because there's not enough real whiskey in them to give them any definite character or flavor.

AH! THIS ONE IS JUST RIGHT FOR ME!

Four Roses Rye is made from the finest, hand-made, aged-in-the-wood Maryland whiskies. No tricks! That's why it's so smooth. That's why it's so rich in flavor.

Experts choose FOUR ROSES WHISKEY

OVER 30 OTHER BRANDS!

HERE'S proof—unquestionable proof—of the superiority of Four Roses. In a "taste-tournament" lasting several weeks, experts chose it over 30 other famous brands. Try Four Roses Rye yourself and you'll know why. It's so smooth, so velvety, so fragrant. And, if used with moderation, it leaves no headache.

Four Roses Rye is made by Frankfort, America's largest independent distilling organization, and a company with four generations of experience behind it. Frankfort's distilling methods are the slow, sound methods of olden times. Its yeast culture is the same one it has guarded for 50 years.

You'll find Four Roses Rye at all the better liquor stores. Ask for it, too, at hotels and restaurants. It is bottled only in full pints and quarts. And you can be certain of its purity. For it comes sealed in the patented Frankfort Pack that must be destroyed before the bottle within it can be removed.

MADE BY FRANKFORT AMERICA'S LARGEST INDEPENDENT DISTILLERS

Try these other famous whiskies! PAUL JONES RYE. A fine, high-quality whiskey that's been a national favorite since 1865. ANTIQUE RYE. Known during Prohibition as America's finest medicinal whiskey.

Rosegarten Wins, Fraidy Cat to Three-Lengh Triumph at Rockingham Park

2-Year-Old Victorious With Ease

Returns $4.70 Mutuel; High Image Finishes in Place Position.

SALEM, N. H., Sept. 6 (AP)—Hal Price Headley's Fraidy Cat, either second or third in his four previous trips to the post, finally entered the winners' circle today when he spread-eagled a field of 2-year-olds in the 6-furlong top event at Rockingham Park.

The black gelding finished the three-quarter dash three lengths in front of M. Madden's High Image under the fine ride of Charles Rosenberger, of Colorado Springs. Rosenberger shot the Headley standard bearer into an early lead and he never left his backers in doubt, running the distance in the fast time of 1:11 2-5 to pay $4.70 straight. "H. H. that's hot," Happy Helen was third in the seven-horse field.

Cloud d'Or Victor. Lincoln Fields, Ill., Sept. 6 (AP). Jumping to the front, Mrs. W. T. Westrop's good mudder, Cloud d'Or, galloped to an easy victory in the 6-furlong feature at Lincoln Fields today. Jockey Otto Harbort had a snug hold of his mount for the entire journey and had four lengths to spare over C. E. Brown's son, Mr. James. R. T. Watts' Wise Ways was third.

Because Paul Keester, sensational apprentice rider who won five races yesterday and three so far today, had the leg up on Mr. James the public made Mr. James the favorite. Mr. James was backed down to even money, but never seriously threatened the winner. Cloud d'Or ran the distance in 1:14 3-5 and paid $6.16.

after five unbroken years of clever pivoting by Lewis Reiss and his successor, big Gene Wager. Coach Gus Tebell has jotted down the "No. 1" object of early practice, these words: "By H. that's hot, find a center." Horace (Bus) Hallett, 178, looks now like the best bet, though Tebell may have to kill off good guard to make a fair center in shifting this boy. It looks like young Horace is going to be offered up to make a Roman holiday, but Tebell and "Butch" Slaughter, his line coach, have no other choice open thus far.

Judging from the name, "Butch" Slaughter is the real executioner. That's neither here nor there. Of greater moment at the university is the common knowledge that Bus Hallett is a boy with splendid team spirit. That means he will give everything he's got. Tebell can only hope and pray that this boy's all-around ability will be enough. With centers frequently roving in this day and time against running attacks and dropping back into the secondary against passes, experience at the pivot counts a lot.

Porterfield is Lost. The gap left by graduation of Bill Porterfield sticks out like a missing tooth in the center of Virginia Tech's line. The Tech coaches will tell you that Porterfield knew the job from A to Z.

Not having Bill Porterfield as a player, the Tech coaches did what they could about it. They got him back to train his successor. He is working diligently with three sophomores—Bill Ruby, Dave Jones and Charles Wagley. Jones is the heaviest, at about 180, and he's a converted full back.

Slaydon Missed. The scythe of time took five first string linemen off the football stage at University of Richmond. It wiped the slate clean from left end to right tackle. No one will be missed more than Claude (Pop) Slaydon. He weighed only 167, but no rival scout ever went back to his haunts claiming that Pop Slaydon didn't know what to do with that 167.

Ed Schaaf, Slaydon's understudy last year, may plug the gap. Schaaf weighs 160 but may be the best available for the post. At the pivot the coaches don't ask for coolness and steadiness, they demand it. Schaaf ought to make a sweet running guard and possibly will get this call. He is fast for his poundage.

And besides, Coach Thistlewaite has probably found out by now that Ed Schaaf is the best punter on the field at Westhampton. Give the kid a chance and he will punt himself right out of a sure center job.

Pair of Newcomers. If Schaaf does boot himself out of the post, his coaches can look to two new men and a former reserve. The newcomers are Robert Munpover—the "fighting parson," they call him—and Carroll Toller, both 185-pounds. The parson isn't wise enough yet in the ways of the gridiron to avoid the Satanic pitfalls that rivals lay for green players. Rival teams would be very generous toward Toller, and with good reason. Keep him in a good humor and he is just another football player. Get him mad and he is plenty rough. The only trouble, from Richmond's standpoint, is it takes almost the full time and attention of some teammates to keep him hating the enemy.

The center problem is a nightmare, too, in Death Valley. Dotson, a fine punter, is going the way of Richmond's Ed Schaaf. He is booting the apple some 60 yards a crack. He'll probably land some where in the back field. Dotson would be heads-on choice for the pivot if he had just kept both feet on the ground. Bernier has other punters; he'll have the name, Houdini, if he turns up with a good pivot man before he heads for Scott Stadium on the twenty-ninth.

College Park, Aided by Walks, Rallies to Trim Federals, 11-9, in Post Series

7-Run Spree Busy Days Are Here Again for Catholic U. and Coach Bergman

Turns Tide In Eighth

Lee and Simon Go Wild as Opponents Parade After 2 Are Out.

AN involuntary yet abundant display of generosity on the part of their pitchers in the final inning snatched apparent victory from the grasp of the Government Printing Office Federals and turned the tide in favor of the College Park team, which finally won, 11 to 9, in the second game of the Post Association inter-league week-day championship series yesterday on the Ellipse. Darkness halted the game in the eighth inning.

Kann's Store, Department Store League winner, faces Government Printing Office, finalist in the departmental loop, as the battle of the various league champions is resumed this afternoon at 4 o'clock on the South Ellipse diamond.

Loses 9-to-4 Advantage.

Going into the eighth with a comfortable 9-to-4 advantage, the Federals appeared to have the game well in hand, but suddenly, with two men out, Pitcher Richard Lee developed a wild streak that marked C. P. O.'s downfall. The Maryland suburban champs, waiting out the nervous Lee, staged a walkathon around the bases. Albert singled, then followed free passes to Carey Maupin and Fred Thomas, filling the bases. Lyman Adams injected a timely single at this time, scoring two of his teammates, but no one became excited. By this time Lee seemed to have lost all his control. After he had walked Milton Reigman, he exchanged positions with Sam Simon, Federal first-baseman.

Simon made the man from Borneo look like a piker and proceeded to walk Johnny Miller, Waverly Wheeler, Shugrue and Rudolph Porter, forcing in a trio of runs. The tide had turned.

For another gift-tally and tossed in another—the seventh run—with a wild pitch.

Six-Run Rally.

A Federal loop pennant winners had pulled up a nice lead in the seventh round when successive singles by Anderson, Lassie, Simon, Reidy and Loge, interspersed by free passes to Lawson and Lee, netted six runs. George Wood, College Park pitcher, made his exit during this fine spree, which was summarily halted by Joe Porter's relief hurling.

Waverly Wheeler garnered the day's field honors with his brilliant defensive play around second base. Fred Thomas and Sam Simon led the hitting for their respective clubs, each batting out three safe blows.

5,000 Watch As Loudoun Show Ends

Pony Events Are Feature of Closing Day at Purcellville.

PURCELLVILLE, Va., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—A gala crowd of 5,000 persons attended the closing day of the Loudoun County Fair and Horse Show here today. Manager F. H. James expressed himself as being well pleased with the success of the two-day event.

The pony show this morning was a big feature of the day. The youngsters brought in a fine lot of entries and staged some splendid performances.

The most exciting of the pony classes this morning was the touch and out. The youngsters rode the mounts so well that it was necessary to ride over the jumps seven times before the class could be sifted down to a single clean performance.

The ribbon finally was pinned on Blue Pearl, owned and ridden by Kitty Smith, while second place went to Myers Lady, ridden by Marvin Green, and third by Brownie, owned and ridden by Walter Norman.

Dr. L. M. Allen's fine hunter, Clifton's Rose, was a big winner in the afternoon classes, which were devoted to the hunters. Clifton's Rose, with a splendid performance, took the colorful Corinthian class and the ladies' hunter. Peach Brothers' classy little mare, Dorothy M., by Reipulse out of Grace, captured the halfbred 3-year-old and hunter hacks. Rittor brothers' Spring Mist and Cockerill, Sir Thomas also came in for a large share of winnings. The consolation class was won by Irvin Beaver's Iron Duke.

Summaries of afternoon classes: Stake class—First, Queen of Sheba, owned and ridden by Walter Norman; second, Clifton's Rose, owned and ridden by Walter Norman; third, Lady Eleanor, owned and ridden by Walter Norman.

Family class—First, Green family, riding Merrimack, Gandadara, Queen of Sheba and Lady Eleanor; second, Keelup and Nellie H. M. Powell and son.

Game class—First, Marvin Green, dressed in green and riding Clifton's Rose; second, Clifton's Rose, owned and ridden by Walter Norman; third, Peach Brothers' classy little mare, Dorothy M., by Reipulse out of Grace, captured the halfbred 3-year-old and hunter hacks. Johnson Trims Thorpe, 2 Up, In Feature Advances With Brownell, Shea and Higgins in District Tourney.

BOBBY BROWNELL, diminutive Manor Club star and medalist, yesterday led the field of junior golfers into the semifinal round of the District championship at Indian Spring to find a successor for the crown now held by Billy Detweiler, competitor in the Nationals at Brookline. Sweeping through their matches with more or less ease were Harvey Johnson, Billy Shea and Jack Higgins.

The withdrawal of Jack Keel, youthful Argyle star, because of the serious injury of his father in an automobile accident, robbed the tourney of an expected semifinalist.

Hot scoring was the vogue in the afternoon matches. Harvey Johnson, Columbia star, won an impressive victory in the morning from Ralph Bogart, of Army and Navy, and continued his fine play in the afternoon with a 72, two over par, to eke out a 2-up win over Merle Thorpe, Jr., on the eighteenth green.

Has Little Difficulty.

Bobby Brownell had little difficulty with Elwood Berkely of the host club in the morning and disposed of Billy Rochelle, Central High School star, in the afternoon, concluding the match on the thirteenth green.

Johnson showed under little Earl Skinner, of Columbia, with a 7-and-6 win on the morning, and put together a pair of 38s in the next match to win over Jimmy Brownell, 3 and 2.

Jack Higgins, Bannockburn, was an easy winner over Dick Myer in his initial encounter, and his brilliant 75 on the quarter-final round against Dick Wilmer found the Chevy Chase lead on the short end of a 4-and-2 count.

Takes Early Lead.

The Johnson-Thorpe match featured the day's play, with Johnson's early lead of 5 up in the first eight holes barely sufficing against the barrage of pars thrown up by the left-handed star.

Johnson birdied the fourth and parred the fifth to assume a 4-up lead. Thorpe found his game at the sixth hole and the next two were halved in pars. Johnson birdied the next with a beautiful spade shot to the pin and went 5 up, needing a par in for a 33.

First round—Bob Brownell (Manor) defeated L. Berkely (Indian Spring), 3 and 2; Billy Rochelle (Indian Spring) defeated J. H. Jones (Belle Haven), 3 and 2; Merle Thorpe (Indian Spring) defeated William Leiser (Indian Spring), 5 and 3; Harvey Johnson (Columbia) defeated Ralph Bogart (Army and Navy), 3 and 2; Jimmy Brownell (Manor) defeated Sam Wolfe (Indian Spring), 3 and 2; Jack Higgins (Bannockburn) defeated Dick Myer (Congressional), 3 and 2; Earl Skinner (Columbia) defeated Dick Wilmer (Chevy Chase) defeated Jack Kene (Argyle) by default.

Second round—Brownell defeated Rochelle, 7 and 6; Johnson defeated Thorpe, 5 and 4; Shea defeated J. Brownell, 3 and 2; Higgins defeated Wilmer, 4 and 2.

This Exhibition Business

By Jack Milley (Pinch-Hitting for Paul Gallico).

NEW YORK, Sept. 6 (Sp.).—The major-domos of the major leagues, most of whom regard the exhibition game racket back to the Indians—and we don't mean the Cleveland Indians—before they're locked up for larceny. This dollar-snatching dodge is rapidly doing our National pastime no good in the hinterlands and it is high time that steps are taken by some of our better step-takers. For, sure, than shooting, if the club owners persist in perpetrating their Punchinello pantomimes upon the populace of Painted Post and displeasing the denizens of Decatur with their baseball burlesques, they'll come out of their coma one of these fine days and wonder why the movie houses are so crowded for matinees.

The sorriest spectacle we ever saw was an exhibition contest played between the champion New York Giants and a semipro outfit in Flint, Mich., last week. Flint is a community noted for its production of automobiles and its confusing liquor laws. In fact, they can make you a car more quickly than they can a whisky sour in Flint—but that is beside the point. Before the Giants arrived, word had been spread by the game's enthusiastic promoter that Carl Hubbell was to pitch, that the brilliant Joe Moore would play left field and that the fans would see the all-star New York production in toto.

But the Michigan impresario hadn't consulted Manager Bill Terry of the Giants and Memphis Bill sent Hubbell (along with his other first-string pitchers) and Moore and Gus Mancuso back to Coogans Bluff before the team entrained from Chicago. When the Giants checked in without these famous fellows the Flint townsfolk were irked. They were further annoyed when Memphis William declined a luncheon invitation from a joint gathering of Kiwanians, Rotarians, Lions and other civic groups upon the plea that he was a ball player and not an after-dinner orator.

A scant 1,500, mostly youngsters, turned up for the Giants play, and this was probably just as well. For the league leaders disappointed themselves like a sub-squad of the Vassar daisy chain. A portly pitcher named Pritchard, considerable of a busher, struck out Terry, the National League's leading batter, three times in succession. When the fans began to give him the old razor, Bill rapped out a single to silence them.

Speed Up the Game.

The boys had to catch an early bus to Detroit, and they were anxious to speed up the game. So nearly all of them struck at the first three pitches served them and they ran off the show in exactly 1 hour and 15 minutes. But the customers who had paid their dough to see the best of the big leaguers got a terrible tossing around and when the game ended, 7 to 3, in our behalf, they were heard to mutter: "So those are the world champions! Phooey!"

And while the visiting players hurried to their hotel, the disillusioned cash customers left the park feeling they had been duped. They had paid plenty to observe the top club in the National League in full stride; they had witnessed a sloppy and indifferent performance and, not realizing that the boys weren't bearing down, were convinced that the champions are an inferior aggregation, and that the big leagues aren't all they're cracked up to be. But there is another angle to the question—the argument of the players and managers against these exhibitions.

Opposed by Players.

The athletes themselves don't want to make these tank town stands. They aren't paid for them and these engagements are always played on an open date, and the busloaders are deprived of their occasional day of rest.

The manager is opposed to exhibitions for other reasons. He has a team fighting for a pennant. A pitcher can pitch only so many winning games a season. Why should he waste one on a contest that doesn't figure in the records? His players, too, have only so much energy to expend upon regular scheduled games. Why should they wear themselves out against a foe who isn't in the league? But the real reason, of course, why a club pilot regards an extra-schedule melee as a bugaboo is because of the injury to valued players. This has happened frequently. Lou Gehrig got beamed down in Norfolk this season. Other stars have been hurt under similar circumstances in the past. And it'll happen again in the future, because the grasping managers abandon this shady business.

Frederick Nine Selects Aids For Series

Burch and Houser Picked; Post-Season Test to Open Tomorrow.

HAGERSTOWN, Md., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—Manager Ray Gardner, of the Frederick Club, pennant winner in the Blue Ridge League, has selected Ernest Burch, catcher, Winchester, Va., team, and Floyd Houser, right-handed hurler of the Chambersburg, Pa., club, to assist his team in the post-season series with Culpeper, the pennant winner of the Valley League.

Each club in the series is permitted to select two players from other clubs in the leagues.

It was decided today that a three-game series will be played, with the first game to be played in Frederick Saturday and a double-header Sunday in Culpeper. The decision to play a three-game series instead of a seven-game one became necessary because of the college players on the Valley League teams, many of whom would have to report back to school before the series was completed.

President Frank Colley, of the Blue Ridge League, announced today an effort is being made to arrange a series between the Frederick club and the pennant winner of the Georges Creek League.

Prospects Are Bright At St. John's College

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—Twenty-three aspirants for positions on the football team of St. John's College were on hand for the first practice session today. Late arrivals are expected to augment the squad to 35. It will be two weeks before the college term begins.

The initial workout, of a light order, was directed by M. Talbot. Today, Riggs, athletic director and head coach, assisted by Valentine (Dutch) Lentz. Although graduation last June exacted a heavy toll, prospects are considered encouraging. The Johnnies will play under a new order of things in that the school will not have a regular captain, a leader will be chosen before each game.

Net Finalist Suffers Blisters; Play Is Off

Cumberland, Md., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—Lawrence Shaffer, defending champion in the men's singles of the Allegany County closed tennis tourney, neared his second time when he was leading Walter Davis, 6-2, 6-4, 4-0, when the match was halted.

Davis suffered blisters to his feet during the match and it was not completed. Shaffer could have accepted a default victory, but is understood to have suggested that the match be concluded when Davis recovered. He needs only two games in the third set to win.

Edwards Named Captain of Veteran Outfit.

Culpeper Wins Valley Loop Play-Off

Defeats Harrisonburg in Duel, 2-0; Douglas Is Batting Star.

CULPEPER, Va., Sept. 6 (Sp.).—The "little world series" is over. Culpeper Athletic Club defeated Harrisonburg here this afternoon in the fourth game of a five-game series for the championship of the Valley League, by a score of 2 to 0.

The game was a duel between Bob Cassell and Ed Carroll, while each first baseman had 17 putouts to his credit.

Douglas, for the locals, garnered four hits, half of the amount connected for two, half of those for the visitors. Neither twirler issued a base on balls.

The victory today gave Culpeper undisputed championship of the original five-team Valley League, consisting of Harrisonburg, Charlottesville, Culpeper, New Market and Woodstock.

Coordinating Building Sizes Aids Economy

Architects Give Advice on Savings by Tax-Supported Agencies.

Economies in the construction of buildings erected by tax-supported agencies can be effected by coordinating the sizes of building materials, the American Institute of Architects declares in endorsing the movement for uniform sizes fostered by the National Bureau of Standards.

The institute points out that the development of such standards should not exclude or discourage the manufacture of odd-sized brick for special purposes or aesthetic reasons.

It is the intention of the co-ordinating movement to confine activities to units for use in structures where economy in materials and labor are deciding factors, such as Federal, State and local government buildings, commercial structures, industrial buildings, mass production projects and low cost housing," it is explained.

Free From Objections.

"For these reasons there is nothing in the proposed project that should be objectionable to architects on the basis of being contrary to their desires for freedom in design. The minor adjustments in sizes of units will be negligible and should have the desirable effect of simplifying matters for the designer.

The architectural profession is in position to play a most important part in the program. It is apparent that if architects throughout the country will specify definite sizes of units which have been designed to fit with other units to form a well-knit structure, a demand will be created for such approved sizes which will automatically insure close cooperation from those engaged in producing such materials.

"A study of sizes of manufactured building units shows room for considerable improvement in correlation, especially in the case of units which go to make up a wall system, such as brick, tile, block, windows, etc. Variations in basic dimensions cause confusion in design and assembling and result in increased costs and faulty construction.

Vagaries of Manufacturers.

"The present lack of coordination and variations in sizes of building materials, particularly in the different sections of the country, should not be attributed to the vagaries of the manufacturers.

"Deviations from the standard sizes adopted by the masonry unit industries, for example, to a large extent be traced to the demands of users of those materials and recognizing this situation, the manufacturers should not be too severely criticized for producing sizes which seem to fit the popular demand.

"In order that a more stable unit may be maintained as a basis of measurement, the brick manufacturers throughout the country with the helpful cooperation of all concerned should be encouraged to adhere as closely as possible to the standard dimensions adopted by this industry.

Minor Adjustments Possible.

"With the assurance that brick sizes would remain constant, leaders in other industries have indicated that the manufacturers of adjoining units will be glad to make such minor adjustments in their products as may be necessary to conform to the requirements of the correlation pattern."

After widespread investigation into the many factors involved, it is reported by the institute that the most satisfactory results for all concerned might be obtained by taking the standard common brick dimensions, 8 by 2 1/4 by 3 1/2 inches, with a slightly increased depth of 1 1/4 inches minimum to 2 1/4 inches maximum, and with a half-inch mortar joint as a basis of measurement for adjoining units.

"The slight increase in depth is needed to provide the desirable 1:1 1/4 ratio for brick laid in any position," it is said. "These combinations seem to provide the most satisfactory basis for determining the sizes of units with the least disturbance to the manufacturing processes of the majority of industries. This is particularly true with regard to such materials as clay tile and concrete block, the sizes of which are now based on standard brick dimensions."

Walt Mason, Himself

Sad Possibilities.

In digging up the meagre coin to buy corned beef or tenderloin, to buy canned kraut or liverwurst for people hungry and distraught, we have the melancholy thought: "It will be a year from now, that we'll be lacking wholesome chow; we may approach the stranger's gate and ask for doughnuts on a plate, and may that stranger treat us then, as we now treat our fellowmen." Our motto is, "Look pleasant, please," while handing out the half-worn boots, dismantled hats and ancient suits. We have our little roll today, but it may shortly wilt away, for nothing's stable or secure; today we're fixed, tomorrow poor; today we have our faith and trust in institutions that may bust; no man can look ahead and know that he will dodge all kinds of woes. We have sad visions now and then; we see the poorhouse in the glen, behold ourselves inside its gate, who used to ride in kingly state. This makes us kinder than of old; our hearts grow warm that once were cold, that once were chilled by foolish pride, when wealth and show were glorified. We saw the poor go up the road, and swaggered in our rich abode; our lot would never be like theirs, we'd never know the poor man's care, and so with something like disdain we viewed his trouble and his pain. But now full sympathy we give; perhaps next August, if we live, we may be sunk in grief and blues and glad of some one's outworn shoes. (Copyright, 1934.)

What Is Home For?

Radio Waves and Ripples

By George M. Adams, Jr.

CONVINCED that news is too perfunctory and needs a dash of seasoning, N. B. C. presently will import a new commenting genius who will serve up murders and marriages with appropriate musical accompaniment.

Elsewhere heard as the "rhyming news reporter," Mr. Stanleigh Malotte, also a piano wizard, will present events in musical jingles from WMAL on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays at 4 p. m., beginning next Tuesday.

From a wide repertoire he mixes grand opera, ballet and jazz with arson, homicide and theft... something like this. Suppose he is reporting a murder... he'll play excerpts from the "Peer Gynt" suite. Similarly, he might try "Are You Makin' Any Money" for holdups; "Around the Corner and Under the Fence" for kidnappings; "Good-Bye Forever" for suicides; "Love for Sale" for divorces; and "How Dry I Am" for the drought situation.

Rather novel... and different entertainment, say those who've heard him.

WHO swiped Dante's bust? This cry of impassioned anguish leaped with frantic, wild-eyed dismay from the pulsating throats of four solemn N. B. C. executives yesterday.

Gone! Disappeared from the immaculate long halls of N. B. C. whence he had started with derisive scorn on visitors, announcers, vice presidents, and office girls alike, was Dante's polished, bronzed, patrician countenance. Without so much as a farewell word, he stepped out into the hall and left. But poignant was the memory of his carefully chiseled aquiline nose... the unspoken words clumped down beneath his grim, pursed lips.

But the medieval antiquarian who had offered repose to this humanist-sonnet-maker, got only so far as the elevator exit. A watchman saw the bulging shape beneath his coat... and Dante returned as suddenly as he had left... once more to gather dust and reign o'er his musical demesne with disappointing indifference.

FAMILIAR to thousands since John Philip Sousa wrote it years ago, "The Washington Post March" is to have a modernized descendant, symbolizing a new era, known as the "New Washington Post March," which will be played for the first time today on WMAL at 10 a. m. by the United States Marine Band during its "Shut-In" hour.

The new composition, the work of Carl R. Engel, chief of the musical division of the Congressional Library, is said to be sprightly, tuneful and possessed of all those instrumental shadings beloved by band music lovers. According to one person who has heard it, "it sort of quotes from the old march in spots."

Harris B. Hull has used the old march continuously since he has been on the air with the Postillon as his introductory theme.

A last! Found one Takoma Park lawyer who will step to the mike and defend the cause of liquor when the "Takoma-We or Dry?" debates go on at 9:30 p. m. Tuesday. Dry speakers have held the spotlight pretty much lately.

So on Tuesday, Lawyer Philip W.

Austin will contend that if the dry measure carries in Takoma Park it will encourage bootleggers and blind pigs, no less. Austin is a former president of the District Association Opposed to Blue Laws.

Little Jack Little, whose familiar "here 'tis" has prefaced his merry melodies for several years over major networks, brings his current C. B. S. orchestra to Loew's Fox Theater today to headline its latest vaudeville array. Famed for his own deft handling of the keyboard, Little interposes his programs with many tuneful vocals.

Isham Jones and his band offer

music of another sort starting today from the stage of Warner Bros. Earle Theater.

LISTENERS at John Heiney's usual WJSV morning spot today will hear, instead of his interview, the dramatization of "Hundred Grand," a gangster-mystery-romance story with authentic and realistic punch. The author, Earle S. Gardner, is a San Francisco lawyer. You'll hear a group of radio thespians, directed by Laura Stagers, unfold the beginning of the drama at 11:15 a. m.

Culbertson on Bridge.

A Successful Strategem.
Often when a tricky or "psychic" play succeeds, it is largely due to the fact that an experienced player is trained to play certain cards at certain times without perceptible doubt or hesitation. Particularly when a Bridge player holds a Queen and a Jack is led through him toward the Ace or King of that suit he will play a low card without thinking, especially if the play is made at the start of the hand when he has had no time to analyze the cards his partner and Declarer hold. He will want Declarer to play the King instead of finessing for the Queen, and he will not give away by any uncertainty the fact that he might have considered covering the card led.

Because of this long-practiced ability to avoid hesitating, on the part of those who play constantly against strong opposition, a simple strategy like the following will succeed as often as not:
